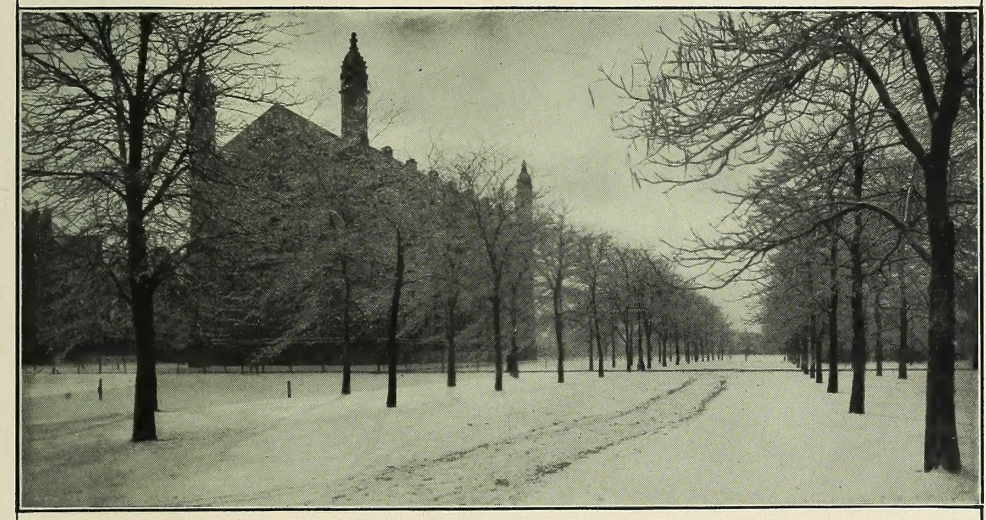
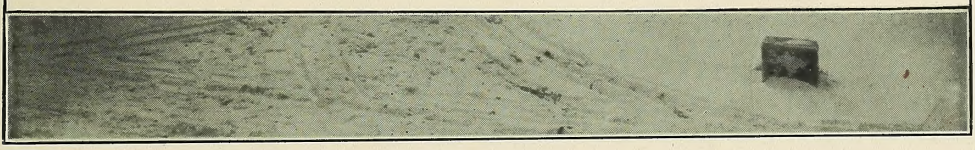
CAP & GOWN



THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

VOL. 12 1907



PUBLIC LIBRARY
DANVILLE, ILL.

To Harry Pratt Judson,
A.M.LL.D., President of
the University of Chicago,
the Editorial Board, in the name of the Junior Class,
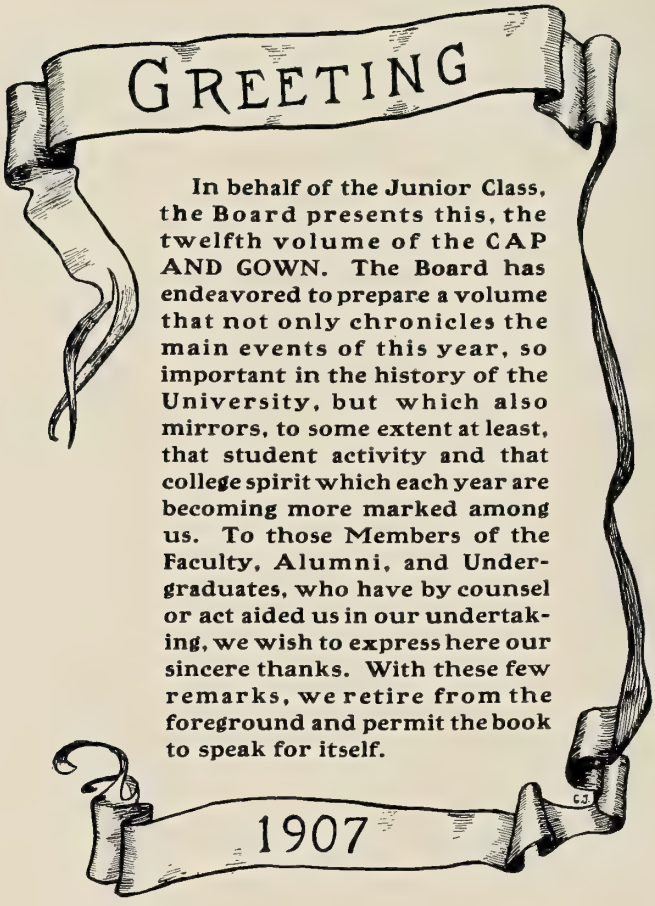
respectfully dedicate this book



GREETING
In behalf of the Junior Class, the Board presents this, the twelfth volume of the CAP AND GOWN. The Board has endeavored to prepare a volume that not only chronicles the main events of this year, so important in the history of the University, but which also mirrors, to some extent at least, that student activity and that college spirit which each year are becoming more marked among us. To those Members of the Faculty, Alumni, and Undergraduates, who have by counsel or act aided us in our undertaking, we wish to express here our sincere thanks. With these few remarks, we retire from the foreground and permit the book to speak for itself.

Harry Pratt Judson

HARRY PRATT JUDSON, the president of the University, to whom this volume of the Cap and Gown is dedicated, was born in Jamestown, New York, December 20, 1849. His father, Rev. Lyman Parsons Judson, was a Baptist minister, the son of Silas Judson of Connecticut, a cousin of Adoniram Judson, the famous Baptist foreign missionary. His mother, Abigail Cook Pratt, was the daughter of Harry Pratt of Hartford, Connecticut, who became one of the early settlers of Rochester, New York, as his ancestor, John Pratt, had been of Hartford. In the female lines the maternal ancestry leads back to Susan Cleveland of Norwich, Connecticut, who was the aunt of Grover Cleveland, Bishop Arthur Cleveland Coxe, William E. Dodge, and Edmund Clarence Stedman, and was a cousin of Gen. Moses Cleveland, the founder of Cleveland, Ohio. With such an ancestry of American pioneers, and himself born on forefathers' day, Mr. Judson could not possibly have escaped being the characteristically strong American he is.

He was prepared for college at Lansingburg Academy, Lansingburg, New York, and then entered Williams College, from which he graduated in 1870, delivering the Philosophical oration, one of the commencement honors. His high scholarship was further attested by his election to Phi Beta Kappa and by the winning of first prize honors in Greek and German. In 1893 his Alma Mater conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. He is a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity.

After graduation he taught in the Troy, New York, high school for fifteen years, during which time he served for six years in the famous military company called the "Troy Citizens' Corps," of which he wrote a history. He also served as commandant of cadets in the high school, these two experiences making him always interested in military affairs. During his Troy residence he was married, January 14, 1879, to Rebecca A. Gilbert, the niece and foster daughter of Hon. William Kemp, the mayor of the city. Their daughter is the wife of Gordon J. Laing, of the department of Latin in this University.

In 1885 Mr. Judson resigned the principalship of the high school to accept a professorship in history in the University of Minnesota, where he served until 1892, also lecturing on pedagogy during six of the years. The institution was in a stage of rapid development and Mr. Judson became at once a leader in every field. He was in the innermost counsels of the president. His progressive policies were welcomed in the faculty meetings, where he was intrusted with important committeeships, notably those which gave attention to shaping the unfolding courses of study. His experience in secondary school work made him a power with the representatives of that part of the educational interests of the state, so that he was able to do much in the direction of the growth of what has been called "the best state public school system crowned by a state university in the Union." In connection with state inspection of public schools and through courses of University Extension lectures, in the giving of which in America he was one of the pioneers, he won a host of friends in Minnesota, who were greatly disappointed when the new University of Chicago made him a flattering offer to cast his lot with it and he decided to accept.

In 1891 he was elected professor of history and dean of the faculties of arts, literature and science in this University, beginning his work in June, 1892, when he found on the ground President Harper, Dr. T. W. Goodspeed and Professor Frank F. Abbott. During that summer the president and professors Judson and Abbott held the first faculty meeting of the new institution, which was to open its doors on October 1st. Since that day Mr. Judson has been a conspicuous leader in every feature of University life. As an administrator he worked in close harmony with President Harper, coöperating earnestly with him in determining the countless details of government which are inwrought into the structure of the University. As a member of both University Senate and University Council he has seen the development of the University to its present strength and has contributed more to its administrative history than any other living man. It was a just recognition of his unquestioned leadership in the faculties that he was chosen by the trustees of the University to take up the burden of administration where President Harper laid it down.

As a teacher Mr. Judson has been preeminently successful. In the secondary work in Troy and in university service at Minneapolis and Chicago he has been a popular, helpful and conscientious instructor, winning the friendship and esteem of his pupils and stimulating them by sympathetic interest in endeavors to find themselves and then make their powers felt. With no affectation of profound scholarship, he has made himself an acknowledged authority in his special field and at the same time has erected no barrier between teacher and student to prevent that warmth of personal contact which wins and holds the heart as the years pass by. This has been the secret of his success. As more and more honorable positions have come to him and his varied talents and accomplishments have developed, he has kept the simplicity of heart and manner which have characterized him always. Like his master, Mark Hopkins, Mr. Judson has been the royal friend of his pupils, a wise and willing counselor, praising in times of success, encouraging in times of failure, and always winning through a personality radiating unselfishness.

Francis Wayland Shepardson.

The Election of the President

HARRY PRATT JUDSON has earned his position as President of the University of Chicago by faithful and constant service to the University ever since its founding and by his particularly efficient administration during the long illness of President Harper and during the year since the President's death. President Judson has brought the University successfully through a trying period. Two years in this difficult position, fulfilling the duties of President of a great university under extreme disadvantages, he has shown his worth and triumphed.

During the last year of Doctor Harper's life the President's illness made it necessary for Doctor Judson, then Dean of the Faculties of Arts, Literature and Science, to assume intermittently the reins of administration and perform the duties of President. On the death of President Harper the work devolved entirely upon Dean Judson. His efficiency during the past year was beyond question, and accordingly, on January fifteenth, he was recommended by the Trustees' Committee on Instruction and Equipment, as Acting President of the University. On the following day at a meeting of the Board of Trustees, Dean Judson was by unanimous vote elected Acting President.

The problems which confronted Acting President Judson were many and difficult. To fill the place vacated by William Rainey Harper, acknowledged one of the greatest educators that ever lived, was a great undertaking. As Doctor Judson was merely Acting President, he was not free to formulate his own policy; his duty was to conduct the University according to President Harper's plans, a task much more difficult than carrying out one's own ideas. Added to this hindrance, the annual financial appropriation was decreased and the new executive was forced to economize in all departments.

The loss of President Harper had a deadening effect on the University and placed the institution in a condition of uncertainty. Nobody knew what was to follow; the presidency and the future policy and success of the University were in doubt. The usual gifts to the University were not forthcoming, pending definite action by the Board of Trustees. On every hand the administration was forced to contend with this feeling of uncertainty. It was under these circumstances that Acting President Judson had to work to prove his efficiency for the office of President.

As a first open recognition of his fitness for the position, Doctor Judson was elected on December first to the General Education Board to succeed President Harper. On January second Mr. Rockefeller's gift of $3,000,000 to the University was significant of the confidence placed by the founder in Acting President Judson. On January fourteenth the Acting President's report showed that the University had been carried through a successful year. Student recognition of the successful administration was made in an enthusiastic reception to Doctor and Mrs. Judson in the Reynolds Club on February eleventh. Satisfaction with Acting President Judson's work had now been expressed on all sides, by other university presidents, by the University faculty, by the University's founder and by the students. The way had been paved, and on February twentieth the Board of Trustees, by unanimous vote, made Harry Pratt Judson President of the University.

Congratulations and letters and telegrams of appreciation poured in from all parts of the country expressing approval of the action of the Board. The students manifested their appreciation of the Board's choice for President by marching en masse to the President's office the next morning and giving the new executive a rousing welcome with yells and cheers. At the Senior Promenade in the gymnasium that evening the new President was given another student ovation. As President and Mrs. Judson appeared on the balcony the dancers forgot the formalities of the occasion and indulged in a lusty cheering fest to show the President what they thought of the choice of the Board of Trustees. In connection with the Winter Quarter Convocation the President's reception was held and was attended by an exceptionally large number of students, faculty members and friends of the President.

All that remained now was the formal inauguration, which was included in the regular Convocation exercises on March nineteenth. The installation ceremony was simple, consisting of the formal announcement of Mr. Martin A. Ryerson, President of the Board of Trustees, and a formal acceptance by President Judson. With these and the addresses by President Ryerson and President MacLean of the University of Iowa, the Convocation Orator, in which a great future for the University under the guidance of President Judson was predicted, a long and victorious conquest against overwhelming odds was completed. Doctor Judson had led the University through the most critical period of her existence; he had led her through safely and successfully; he had proven his efficiency; and had been rewarded with the Presidency of the University.

JOHN HOWARD UPTON

Erie Baker Hulbert, D.D., LL.D.

Professor Hulbert was born in Chicago in a house situated where the Masonic Temple now stands, July 16, 1841. He graduated from Union College in 1863, and from the Hamilton Theological Seminary in 1865. He was with the Christian Commission in Grant's army 1862-64. He was a Baptist pastor from 1866 to 1881, serving churches in Manchester, N. H., St. Paul, Minn., San Francisco, Cal., and Chicago. In 1881 he became professor of Church History in the Baptist Union Theological Seminary, then located at Morgan Park, Ill. On the incorporation of this school in the University of Chicago as its Divinity School in 1892, he became its Dean and head of the department of Church History. He died in Chicago, February 17, 1907.

Dr. Hulbert was a sincere Christian, an able preacher, a diligent student, an enthusiastic teacher, an efficient executive, a faithful friend. His deepest interest was in men and in the institutions that make for the welfare of men. He was a member of the University Senate, of the Council, and of the Board of Athletics, and took an active interest in all phases of University life. The curriculum of the department of Church History as developed under his guidance covered a range of study wider, possibly, than had previously been the case in any American theological school and laid especial emphasis upon the history of the modern period. Though master of an admirable style, he wrote little for publication. Possessing unusual ability in rousing interest in his subject on the part of his students, he preferred the class room to the printed page as the medium of his influence on his generation. His memory will be affectionately cherished by his students and colleagues in the University of Chicago, to whom he had greatly endeared himself by his rugged manliness, his ready sympathy and his indomitable courage.

Wilbur Samuel Jackman

An Appreciation

THE fact that the University of Chicago has completed the first half of the second decade of its history is brought sharply to mind by the frequency with which it is called upon to note vacancies caused by death in the ranks of its officers. No such call has come to it so suddenly as that occasioned by the death of Wilbur Samuel Jackman, Principal of the University Elementary School. Principal Jackman had been associated with Col. Francis W. Parker, first in the Cook County Normal School, then in the Chicago Institute, and since the organization of the School of Education he had been among the leaders in that division of the University. He came almost twenty years ago from Pennsylvania upon the invitation of the Cook County Board, who acted upon the recommendation of Col. Parker. What attracted Col. Parker was Mr. Jackman's reputation as a teacher in the field of "Nature Study." In that field Mr. Jackman was in a very true sense a pioneer, and to him probably more than to any other one man, is due the position of nature study in the elementary schools. As a student of nature Mr. Jackman was almost as much poet as he was scientist. His own thought endowed all animated nature with personality. He had in him much of the same feeling for nature that Chaucer and Burns and Wordsworth had. And though each of these approached nature from different points of view, Mr. Jackman in a way combined in himself the feeling that characterized each of the other three.

Mr. Jackman will be missed sadly by his colleagues in the University, as well as by those who knew him in a more purely social way. In his professional work he was prolific in ideas and plans, that is to say, he was a progressive educator; things with which he had to do were not likely to be allowed to "stand still." He had in him the nature of an autocratic leader, but he deliberately strove to bend his own ruling tendencies in the direction of democracy. He believed that each member of his own Faculty should have the utmost freedom to work out his own plans in his own way. He was a delightful social companion, and his ever present humor was a source of pleasure to others and must have brightened for him many a hard experience. As was true of President Harper and Col. Parker, and all large, free, kind hearted natures, he never outgrew the boy, and loved play and the outdoor world.

The History of the Class of 1907

CUSTOM requires that the historian of the Senior class shall be very dignified, that he shall not indulge in the foolishness that characterizes some of the lower class scribes, but shall confine himself strictly to facts—hard, prosaic facts, like the number of people the class has on the Dramatic Club, or who was Treasurer in the Freshman year. Somehow we feel that that sort of thing is not at all necessary in telling of the Class of 1907, because, we believe, we may safely leave our actions to speak for themselves. If you want to know what the members of our class have done, just cast your eye over the following pages, and see for yourself. But after all, this history is not written for the amusement of lower classmen, but that, when we ourselves look at it in the days to come, we may be reminded of a few of the exploits that we as a class performed, and may speak with greater assurance to our sons and daughters of the "best class that ever left Chicago."

Do you remember what a time we had trying to elect our Freshman officers; how the Sophomores came in a body to break us up; and how we went to their meeting in revenge, only to be rebuffed by Dean Vincent, ominously standing at the door? And do you remember those awful caricatures of him which we pasted in the dark of night, with fearful hearts and whispering mystery, in every place, appropriate and otherwise, around the campus? Were we green in those days? Well, rather. Did you buy a chapel ticket from Fat Maxwell? Never mind, you weren't the only one. Weren't we funny little tikes, strutting about in majesty? Those were the good old days, before they did away with class distinctions in the Junior Colleges, and it was the fashion to form class debating clubs, and conduct long wordy scraps with the Sophomores on subjects that have puzzled the statesmen of the world. But we settled them! To be sure we did. On the whole, we were just about as gullible, as funny, and as conceited, as the Freshman class is this year.

Well, the next year, in the natural course of events, we, or most of us at least, were Sophomores. We sat on the C bench (it was new in those days), and were just about as biggity as we had been the year before. We illustrated the great truth that there is only one thing more comic than a Freshman, and that is a Sophomore. But no one took much notice of us that year, and left alone, our cranium gradually assumed a proper size, and we became essentially the highly respectable crowd that we are to-day. Along in the spring of that year, the Freshmen, spoiling for a fight, ran up a flag, with their numerals on it, and eagerly awaited results. We looked at it and smiled, and along about chapel hour, one of the gardeners took it down and burned it. The Freshmen were about ready to cry. They called us quitters, but they were wrong. Our long and solitary year had made us wise, and we knew that there is something more to college life than blacking eyes and furnishing repair jobs for Jake Famous.

The next year we came into our own. The period of probation was over. The big event of the year was the "Cap and Gown" controversy. We talked and talked and talked, making a pretty good imitation of a co-educational Dorcas society, and some of us lost our tempers and called nasty names; but in the end everything was arranged harmoniously, and the class itself published the book. We were the first that had ever attempted to do the trick on our own responsibility, and the result — well, we wonder how this year's editors are going to improve upon it. And now we're Seniors, mighty Seniors, respected by the under-classmen, boasted of by our fond parents, but knowing nevertheless, down deep in our hearts, that we are only Freshmen grown a little bigger, and a little, a very little, wiser.

Important things have happened at the Varsity in our day. President Harper has died. We were the last class that ever felt the influence of his active presence in University affairs. We are also the first Senior class that has had the opportunity of coöperating with the new President, and of helping to start the second era of the University's life, the era of internal development. During our time we have seen many of the alumni of the early years come back and marvel at the wonderful growth since their time, and we hope,—no, more than that, we know,—that, in the days to come, when we return to the City Gray, and when our children and our children's children have taken our place as the undergraduates of to-morrow 'we too shall marvel, and speak with husky voices of the days when we were young, and hopeful candidates for bachelor degrees.

JUNIORS

The Junior Class History

THE CLASS of '08 was born in the Indian Summer of '04—this, for the benefit of those who cannot figure—and the coincidence undoubtedly explains the piquant flavor of our disposition and exploits—a flavor peculiarly Tribal.

If the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, the first public action of the Class was to take itself seriously. This was a very proper thing to do, we thought, and still think, because we merely imitated every imitable person that had ever been seen at the University since the Rough Ridden days of Teddy Linn. However, flags immediately fell to a suggestive Half-Mast, and our stand was questioned from all sides on grounds of fact, and then again on grounds of taste. Nevertheless, we cautiously looked up our sleeve, laughed into it, and found something there. We bided our time. We knew what we were doing.

Now we are come to Chapter Three. With the closing pages in sight we have the authority of Henry James in beginning to disclose what we are driving at. We will mercifully release the Angora, so to speak. We will tell why we knew what we were doing. We will tell how we looked up our sleeve, why we laughed, and what we found. Hush-h-h. The Class Secret.

It was the first Class meeting. The air was heavy with fraternity politics. The place was quite a few miles this side of a Heavenly Calm. The Belle of the Class was putting an entirely new construction on the possibilities of woman's suffrage. Then suddenly there came a hush; no warning, but every one stopped instinctively. Slowly, in walked a little, grey lady—the loveliest, loveliest, little grey lady that ever was. She smiled sweetly like a lost and happy child, and in one glance of her demure blue eyes she gave us for nothing what Edna May asks a dollar—and then one more—for. She avoided the Main Aisle—she always does—and she tiptoed up to the blushing president and whispered meekly in his ear. He rapped for order. It was handed to him and inscribed upon the Minutes. Silence grew amain.

Fluent, never lacking for the Polished Phrase; never shifting from one foot to the other; never reddening—for new Freshman presidents never, never do that—so that new president of ours told the little lady's story—told what she had whispered in his ear. She had been over to a '07 Class meeting and had been summarily ejected. But we liked her and she liked us. So she stayed. She has stayed ever since. She is our Patroness. And this little grey lady is Modesty.

With that much told, it is unseemly to tell more. Indeed, that was The Event in the Class career. Consequently, what we have done must stand on flat-footed merit, and speak with its own husky voice for itself.

But pursuing the strain of utter self-abnegation, may we say that we have at all times tried to do the right thing by the insurance men, and so we never expect to set the world on fire?

In the Chicago college-family, we have never claimed to be the Promising Son who will Do Well, and who Does; Father first. We have rested well content to be the obscure younger brother, who carries in the wood and helps mother.

We have seen Class Records, Class Histories and other amateurish things equally abominable in the sight of the Lord, and while we are quite awed by the ease with which they reach the Nth power of the Pompous, still we are completely dissuaded from trying it ourselves.

Never, never, have we pulled down our hat brim in front and sat on the "C" bench and murmured " 'Varsity, 'Varsity" or other such College Spirit sesamés, thinking that we were the All-Wool and a Yard Wide.

We have ever condemned attempts to build up a reputation as Rah Rah boys and Rah Rah girls. We would like to please the older people but not the cartoonists.

We do not expect to be missed after the Cum Laude-Man has handed us ours. We fully realize that we are only parts in a Large Scheme. We will try to be Perfect Parts, but we will not be disappointed if we remain Small Parts. It's too good to be a Part.

All that we wish for is that we shall have been unfair to no one, hurt no one, or kept from anyone his due. If we are remembered, let it be as the striking figure of the Publican, who was In Touch with the goings-on in the Higher Places but who was wise enough not to tell.

In this much we have taken ourselves seriously. One more year and we will be bound for the Outre Mer. With us we will carry the consciousness of having enjoyed ourselves supremely. So has the Little Grey Lady, who will always stay with us after our going from here.

Der History off der Sophomore Class

I AM nod a real historian—Himmel, no! Also needer vas Lincoln. Und yet ve all acknowletch dot Ape made history. Hence I vill now do likevise but in a different vay, aind it? Der history I vill make vill be dot off der Sophomore class, und I do it so dot in after years I vill be able to look upon meinself mit proudful humility und puffed-out chest und say, "Peholdt, here iss it ein maker off history yet." Den vill I regret lamently dot I am a Soph-no-more. Howefer, far from me iss der intentions to proof dot I am all der candy—radder to distribute der tootsome confectionaries among my class mates, at der same time taking choyful pains to hand efergreen to der Freshmans und lemons to der Chuniors und Seeniors.

Ve are der main vurks at dis Unifairsity. Der mere fact dot W. Patrick Henry iss vun off us proofs dot mitoudt der shadow off a reason. Can ve efer forget der day, der great day, yea der famous day, ven he safed der honor off der Sophomore class, hance off der whole Unifairsity? Der time vich I refer to iss ven siggs battleships off fashion und two torpedo boats off reformed clothes mit also a flackship off sartorial refolution—all sent from der Tailors' Confention—poured grape shot off der bitterest kind in our midst. Den it vas dot our hero rose him to der occasion und shoutfully eggsclaimed: "Gif me a frock coat or gif me death!" Und somehow he scared der enemy avay.

Besides ve haf also anodder hero vich der students know—if not py name at least py sight. As der actual matter off fact stands, I doaned know his name meinself. On farious occasions he iss called Big Chon, Long Chon, Siggs-foot Chon, und efen Langy Chon. Anyvays, his last name iss Schommer, und he iss under contract not to trow more dan nine-tents off der baskets vich der Farsity makes in her course off a game. To mention odder stars vich hail from OUR class und reign in der atletic firmament, dere iss Vallie Steffen, who is a shark in football und track,—und— —basketball; also Mike Kelley, (I aint sure about der fairst name), who vunce manached to last a whole football game; Klock, der only timepiece which runs mit his legs; "Merry" der conference champ; Hal Iddings, our president; und Henneberry, der polar vault artist. Vot a shine dis starry galaxy cuts! Vot a shine, ve repeat it! (Ve are sorry if der reflection hurts der eyes off any odder class.)

I haf mentioned patriotism and atletics. But our fame doaned end here. O, nay, it does not efen stop for a sandvich. It trafels double-qvick into der realms off literary actifities. It calls on Hansen und Klein, der comic opera kinks, und says, "Hurray for 'Sure-Ting Secregation'! It got past Bardley Cushing." Den it pays its compliments to Colorado Deak Henderson und Preston Plugavay Gass, two chaps vich do time on der Daily Maroon. Next it salutes Gert Greenbaum, alias Angel-Face, alias Bright-Eyes, alias Dramatic Vunder, alias Class Secretary. Fred Carr, who iss der Pen Cloob, und Bill MacCracken, der self-appointed commander-in-chief off der Tree-Qvarters Cloob, soopscribe dere names to der roll off illustritious pairsonifications. Den, remembering dot ve haf representatifs galore in efry branch off colletch actifity und also dot ve ducked Freshman Paull, ve put our fame on eggshibition as an eggsample to be imitationed.

Freshman Diary

October 1, 1906.—Freshman Class arrives from goodness knows where—and struts about campus. Faculty members, particularly athletic instructors, and upper class men sit up and take notice. Promising Freshman athletes stalk carelessly about the campus with hands in pockets, followed by admiring crowd of Sophomores. Freshman girls amuse themselves by commenting on the styles of dress at the University.

Oct. 2, 1906.—Dean Vincent cracks his usual joke about in-coming Freshmen.

Oct. 3, 1906.—Junior Dean's office mobbed by terrified Freshmen who wish to drop English I course. Gently soothed by Dean and persuaded to return. Great speculation among Freshman girls as to which professors are married, and what their wives look like.

Oct. 5, 1906.—Upper class girls give a "Freshman Frolic," under the auspices of the Y. W. C. L. Five hundred girls march about the campus with Japanese lanterns, giving Chicago yells and songs. Vaudeville performance in the Reynolds Club Theater. Impromptu, to say the least.

Oct. 11, 1906.—Kalailu Club gives rushing party. Freshmen girls are given clothespins to dress. Stunning styles displayed.

Oct. 12, 1906.—Mr. Linn, in English I class, comments on remarkable number of expository themes on "How to Dress a Clothespin."

Reynolds Club Smoker and Freshman Pie Eating Contest. Macomber wins by a tooth. Afterwards, Percy P. Paul is tossed into the botanical fishpond.

Oct. 15, 1906.—W. Pat Henry calls conference of Sophomore representatives from each fraternity, who decide that hereafter Freshmen shall wear green caps with maroon buttons to indicate their rank—provided, of course, that the Freshmen agree.

Oct. 18, 1906.—After strenuous objections on the part of Lambach, the Freshman Class decides to adopt the suggested green "postage stamps" and thereby uphold their class spirit and establish a precedent.

Oct. 25, 1906.—Freshman Class Election. In spite of interference of upper class politicians the following are fairly elected to office: Walter Taylor, President; Walter Hoffman, Vice-president; Esther M. Hall, Secretary; Albert Henderson, Treasurer.

Nov. 1, 1906.—Freshman Football Team scores on Varsity eleven.

Nov. 8, 1906.—Three Quarters Club pledges indulge in ear-biting contest around "C" bench, inspired by Sophomores.

Nov. 9, 1906.—Freshman Football Team pretends it is Minnesota, so the Varsity eleven can show what they are going to do to Minnesota. Latest reports—two killed, one injured. The Freshmen have always shown themselves to be obliging. Some of the stars of the Freshman team are Page, Taylor, Hough, Orchard, Weary, O'Brien, Hubble, Macomber, Lacke and Hoffman.

Nov. 10, 1906.—Minnesota-Chicago game. Pouring rain all day. Between halves the Three-Quarters Club initiates amuse the bedrenched bleachers with an exhibition game of "reformed football." Orchard, captain of the "Drag-em-alongs" and Berry of the "Debrutalized Boys." Neither side won or lost. The only casualty of the game was the loss of a perfectly good temper and several articles of wearing apparel by Macomber.

Nov. 23, 1906.—Mass meeting for Nebraska game. Bonfire and wrestling matches on the campus afterwards. Freshmen win and Sophomores bite the dust. Freshmen "mat artists" were Collings, Nelson and O'Brien.

Nov. 25—Dec. 20, 1906.—Nothing doing.

Dec. 21, 1906.—Fall quarter closes.

Jan. 3, 1907.—Winter quarter begins. News is circulated that "Beth" Fogg, Freshman, has passed Prof. Thompson's History I course.

Jan. 5, 1907.—Freshmen track candidates report and produce a smile of surprise and delight upon the face of Coach Friend. Among said promising ones are Page, Garrett, Hough, Lingle, Collings, Taylor, MacNeish, Glore, Hubble, Wendt, Erhorn, O'Brien and Macomber.

Feb. 8 and 9, 1907.—Freshman girls come to front in the Woman's Athletic Carnival and are presented with nosegays of snuff.

Feb. 12, 1907.—Freshman Class officers have their pictures taken for the Cap and Gown, as they are fast becoming so wan and emaciated from their excessive official duties that it is feared they can not be recognized much longer.

Feb. 21, 1907.—Freshmen girls appear at the Washington Prom in the sweet, girlish simplicity of their resurrected graduation dresses.

Feb. 26, 1907.—Freshman Diary goes to Cap and Gown press with the Freshmen still doing things.

The Junior Colleges

THE RAPID INCREASE in numbers of undergraduates in our larger institutions has introduced serious problems of social organization. The friends of the small college have pressed vigorously the claims of these communities and at the same time the influence of Oxford and Cambridge has been felt in American academic circles. In the large Universities the classes which used to be social units have broken down under the sheer weight of numbers and have disintegrated because of the elective system. The old democracy has in the nature of things tended to disappear and small groups, cliques, and secret societies have become the units of social life. These tendencies have been accompanied by a gradual drifting apart of faculty and students, although in some institutions the relationship between instructors and under graduates was never very close.

If the large institution has suffered from some of the evils associated with city life the small college has preserved many of the advantages of the country community. Numbers are limited, class organization is more generally maintained, relationship with the faculty is closer. On the other hand, many of the small colleges suffer from lack of adequate equipment, from rural isolation, and on the whole from the inability to command the highest type of instruction. The problem presented them is that of securing the social advantages of the smaller academic community without surrendering the unquestioned superiorities of the great university. Student clubs of which the "Harvard Union" is an example, have been established to preserve the spirit of democracy and to foster undergraduate loyalty. In one or two cases as at Princeton, systematic attempts have been made to bring students into closer and more intimate contact with the teaching staff.

At Chicago another experiment is being made. The undergraduates of the Junior Colleges have been divided into eight colleges for purposes of association and coöperation. To each college a Dean and Faculty have been assigned. Over each college an elected committee of students exercises general direction in consultation with the Dean. The plan is in its second year. On the whole it has proved successful. Its best results cannot be expected to appear until buildings especially adapted to the life of the colleges have been provided, but even under the unfavorable conditions which at present exist, the experiment has shown many signs of promise and has more than justified itself. A college loyalty is developing, a sense of initiative is appearing among the students, generous rivalries in athletics and in debates have been stirred, social relationships of many kinds have been established, contact between members of the teaching staff and these college groups has been secured and at the same time loyalty to the University as a whole has not been weakened. The progress of the experiment is being watched with interest by academic officers in all parts of the country and the "Chicago plan" has already become a familiar idea.

THE Reynolds Club

"The object of this Club shall be to promote good fellowship among the men of the University of Chicago"
—Article 2 Section 1, of the Constitution of the Reynolds Club

Any Society that maintains itself and lives up to its stated purpose is successful. During the year 1906–1907 the Reynolds Club has done this and more. For the first time, perhaps, the Club has during the present year definitely accomplished the end designed for it by the founders. In this connection it is interesting to read the opinion of those in charge of the Club two years ago. "So far", runs the account of the Club in the 1905 CAP AND GOWN, "it has been hard for the officers to arouse a proper interest among the members in the undertakings of the Club. There is not yet an esprit de corps. Too many members have looked upon the Club as a public institution, a mere place to seek recreation, rather than as an organization in which they should take a hand when opportunity offered, and the property of which they should at all times protect."

During the next year, that is, 1905–1906, there was a very evident change in the attitude of the students toward the Club, the membership increased considerably, and the interest in Club affairs became more general. But it was not until this year that the work of the Club in "promoting good fellowship" became apparent to all. When at the conclusion of the Hard Times party given in January, all the men gathered around the piano and sang Chicago songs in chorus, the real influence of the Club was manifested. That lack of college spirit here, which has been the jibe of other universities for so many years, is no longer, and the Club has not been the least of the causes of its disappearance.

The active membership has steadily increased from quarter to quarter. During the autumn of 1905 there were two hundred and sixty-nine active members, the next quarter there were three hundred and twenty-four and in the spring, three hundred and twenty-eight. At the beginning of this year special efforts were made to secure new members and the result was a total of three hundred and ninety-seven for the quarter. The increase continued, and the winter quarter showed a total of about four hundred and twenty-five—an increase of over one hundred active members in one year. Contrasted with this the associate membership has shown a tendency to decline. There was an increase from one hundred and nineteen in the fall of 1905 to one hundred and seventy-three during the winter, but since then the associate membership has decreased slightly each quarter. In the spring of 1905 there were one hundred and seventy-two, the next fall one hundred and seventy, and in the winter but one hundred and sixty. The failure of the faculty to appreciate the fact that the Club is designed for them as well as for the students has been one of the most perplexing problems brought to the consideration of the Executive Council. Efforts will be made in the next year to dissipate this feeling of aloofness on the part of the faculty.

The increased active membership has brought with it increased financial prosperity. The Club is now in a very satisfactory condition, with a good balance at the registrar's office and no outstanding bills. The pool and billiard tables and the bowling alleys, as well as the barber-shop, have all shown a balance on the right side of the books for the past year. This gratifying financial condition has done much toward making the tasks of the officers lighter.

The Club has continued its policy of entertaining its members and guests about twice a month. The usual plan has been to alternate dances and smokers, although there were several deviations from this schedule. The Hard Times Party mentioned was perhaps the most successful affair of the year. The novelty of the occasion drew out a large and congenial crowd, the majority of whom entered into the spirit of the occasion and came in costume. The affair was a typical Chicago one, and all present joined in the conclusion that it had done much toward drawing the undergraduates closer together. The regular dances were all well attended, and in fact it has been a problem how to handle the crowds. It has been necessary to have two orchestras, and to dance both on the main and the second floors at every party.

The smokers have for the most part been very informal. Members of the Club who are talented in a musical or a histrionic way have been ready to contribute impromptu stunts to these affairs, and the theatre in the Club has developed some of the best talent in college. Well known men have usually been invited as guests of honor, and their remarks on various subjects were listened to with pleasure by the members present. An informal reception was given in honor of Acting President and Mrs. Harry Pratt Judson in February, and about five hundred people visited the Club during the evening. This will be made an annual event.

Aside from affairs given by the Club itself, the Club rooms have been busy with other parties and gatherings. All the Junior Colleges have at one time or another entertained in the Club, and many of the girls' clubs and other organizations have done likewise. It has been, and will continue to be, the policy of the Club to be very liberal in this regard, it being the opinion of the officers that all gatherings of students tend to promote that fellowship which is the purpose of the organization.

Several interesting competitions in billiards, pool, and bowling were held during the past year under the auspices of the Club. The annual tournaments in billiards and pool for the championship of the University attracted much attention and a large entry list. The play covered a period of three weeks and was closely followed. The Interfraternity Bowling League played off its matches on the Club alleys, which were thoroughly overhauled and newly equipped for the occasion. Club championships in singles and doubles were also rolled off.

The Reynolds commission, working through the Club and its officers, carried out the most successful preparatory track meet ever held in the West. In the work of the Commission the Club played a large part, the building being used as headquarters by the Commission itself, and by the visiting prep men when they arrived. The Club also undertook the management of the entertainment given for the visitors. The efforts of the Commission were well rewarded, several of the stars of the meet entering the University in the following fall.

In March, 1906, officers were elected for the ensuing year. At this time Earl Dewitt Hostetter was elected president, Huntington Babcock Henry, vice-president, Edward George Felsenthal, secretary, Donald Putnam Abbott, treasurer, and William A. McDermid, librarian. When Henry left the University at the end of the school year, William Buckingham Gray was elected to the vice-presidency. Mr. Merriam and Mr. Warren served as the Faculty representatives during the entire year.

The Daily Maroon

THE YEAR just passed has been an unusually bright one for The Daily Maroon. It has not only advanced from a position among the best to an undisputed position as the best paper in the world of college journalism, but it has made the greatest strides in its own history during the last twelve months. The growth has been characterized by steady and marked improvement in the appearance of the sheet, the change from an afternoon paper to a morning paper, enlargement from four columns to five columns, and the presentation of more complete, more lively, more recent, and more accurate news.

Change from an afternoon to a morning paper, effected at the beginning of the spring quarter last year, while it meant much additional labor to the editors and business managers, enabled the editors to present complete news of University interest at the time when the students want it—before breakfast. A simultaneous enlargement of the paper by making the page one column larger and reducing the size of the type used gave much more space to editorial matter. Where last year The Daily Maroon averaged seven columns of reading matter a day it now averages from twelve to thirteen—an amount more than double that devoted to news in most college papers, and over three columns more than is run in any other college paper in the country.

Complete and accurate accounts of all news of interest have been given. The Daily Maroon has been authoritative information. The progress of the "reform football rules" and the Conference agitation have been followed in detail with accurate accounts. Through the illness of the late Dean Hulbert the University was kept informed of the patient's condition by The Daily Maroon bulletins received from the hospital the last thing before going to press at 3:00 A. M. During the convention of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs in Mandel Hall the accounts of The Daily Maroon were so complete and so accurate that The Daily Maroon reports were accepted as the official reports of proceedings. Instances of handling of late news are: the three-cornered intercollegiate debate this winter, and the election of Dean Judson to the Presidency of the University. The night of the intercollegiate debates The Daily Maroon had telegraphic communication with each of the teams and was the only college paper to print accounts of all three debates the next morning. News of President Judson's election wasr eceived by The Daily Maroon late in the afternoon, but the next morning saw in The Daily Maroon as complete an account of it, together with the histories and customary comment, as appeared in any Chicago paper. As a result of these improvements in the paper, the circulation has increased over fifty per cent over that of last year.

More important and more far-reaching in results than these improvements have been the accomplishments in another direction. The editors have succeeded in making for The Daily something which it has long needed and which has previously failed to materialize—a working constitution. Until this time the paper has been running on an original agreement, long since outgrown, and the organization and management of the paper could not be explained to the students. The new constitution places the publication on a firm basis and exposes the workings to the students and faculty in plain black and white.

Though in a somewhat different line, another advancement, equally as important as any of the others, has been made by The Daily. An editorial policy with "Harmony" as the keynote has been adopted by The Daily Maroon and spread, with great success, to the other college papers of the West, and in some cases the East, aiming to minimize the "petty knocking" which has characterized college journalism heretofore and to substitute for it a healthy intercollegiate spirit of friendly rivalry.

While The Daily has made some great strides in all directions during the past year, the editors realize that the paper is not yet beyond improvement. Great things are promised in the way of smoothing off the rough places and oiling the machinery in all departments during the next twelve months. The aim is not to put out the best college paper in the country, but to produce the best paper that circumstances will allow.

AN ACCIDENT IN THE OFFICE.

The Rushing of Raxes

"With music and mirth,
They rule the sad earth."

THE BLACKFRIARS withdrew to the privacy of their monastery, after two whirlwind successes, "The Passing of Pahli-Khan" and "The King's Kalander Keeper," and in secret cloister decided to perpetrate still another joke on the University public. "The Rushing of Raxes," their third annual comic opera, was the result. As twice before, Walter L. Gregory was the principal offender. His bespattered record has been exposed so thoroughly that it is only necessary to mention that he was born in Indiana, which accounts for his depraved literary proclivities, and that this last effort, misguided by evil intention, rose far above all previous theatrical endeavors. It would be unjust to Greg if part of the blame was not shouldered off onto some one else, for Newton A. Fuessle was a party to the plot and responsible for some of those melodramatic lines which wrung tears from sympathetic souls. Bill McDermid was also guilty of many of the lines of the lyrics, which did not rhyme but which sounded well when properly affixed to harmonious notes.

It would be sacrilegious to cast any reflections on the character of the music, because it was an improvement even on that of the year before. Earle Smith directed and wrote many of the numbers.

The cast and chorus were selected and drilled with much care—and more pain—by Coach Cushing. Felix Hughes as Prince Raxes moved and spoke as if he might displace his wig by any great activity, but he succeeded in portraying the athletic idol and heroic lover in a manner which appealed to the audience. Charlie Spence as Milo, starred with true stellar brilliancy—as usual. Karl Dixon, as the Freshman, made a long jump from the old decrepit king of the year before, but despite this rejuvenation was perfectly natural in his foolishness. Mart Flavin played the part of a reporter in a frenzied sort of way, butting into situations at the wrong time—but that was all in the show. Jimmy Hill imitated Jimmy Twohey so closely that the latter became jealous of himself. How many masculine hearts might have been lost to Artie Bruce, Jay Weddell and Hunt Henry, no one knows. Artie's dainty poses and naughty manner, Jay's statuesque and unblemished blond beauty and Hunt's irresistible smile might have been a fatal combination, had their basso profundo not betrayed them. B. I. Bell and Benny Allin represented the faculty of the University of Bangaboo with animated enthusiasm, à la "College Widow." Charlie Jordan held down two parts, one as an Egyptian student and the other as the Tommie Lawson of athletics. Duke Hutchinson swore vehemently that Adolph Pierrot's depiction of him was a libel. Sights, as Jack Dope, and Lord, as Teddy Theme, also aroused the enmity of two campus characters. Bill Hewitt and George Law, coached by Bert Houghton, as Alonzo Deer, represented the department of physical culture with proper Chicago spirit—and Austin, Ireland and Simpson as the Sateen family were there to see them do it—as usual. The bulldog ballet put the audience in the misery of hysterics and kept them unrestrained and insane for ten minutes.

And Charlie Paltzer, rushing madly to and from rehearsals, everywhere at once behind the scenes the night of the performance—in fact, living the role of an escaped lunatic—was the father of it all.

TRELAWNEY of the WELLS

H. D. B. More

FAR BACK in the hazy past—long before the Nebular Hypothesis was exploded by our geological department—bubbling, dramatic enthusiasm gathered itself together for one mighty eruption, and the University of Chicago Dramatic Club burst forth amidst a blaze of glory. It is not to be supposed, of course, that before that ancient period nothing in the nature of dramatics had been accomplished by our maroon ancestors; but on March 12, 1895, the first formal appearance of a University of Chicago Dramatic Club was witnessed. The inauguration consisted of the presentation of a triple bill of spicy one-act plays; and success, quickly alighting on the standard of the club, has refused to take wing ever since.

Good as the original plays then presented were, the club began producing farces and comedies by well-known playwrights instead. In the winter of 1901 a still greater change was effected in the organization's productions. For the first time a professional coach was secured, Kent and Rosalie were abandoned, and Daly's "A Night Off" was presented in University Hall, Fine Arts Building. From then on the club began improving both on the class of plays and the means of presentation.

In 1903 another change was experienced in the ideals of the club. Comedies were still in order, but comedies of a more serious kind gained preference. De Banville's "Gringoise," Rostand's "The Romancers," "The Merchant of Venice,"

"Land of Heart's Desire," which performance was attended by its author, William Butler Yeats, and such like plays, were consequently produced. This is still the club's policy, light farces being reserved for social meetings. Recently the club has found a permanent home theatre in Mandel Hall. While its use prevents any change in scenery under the new city ordinances, this disadvantage has been well overcome, thus far, by the selection of plays which could be easily given with a single set.

Last spring, 1906, "Trelawney of the Wells," by Arthur W. Pinero, was presented at Mandel Hall under the direction of Donald Robertson. The play was another departure from former offerings on the part of the club in that it was constructed on the most modern lines by the most modern writer. It possessed the unique feature of having the rehearsal of a play within the play itself, and had a larger and better balanced cast than any previous single production. Almost every member of the club was pressed into service. Each character offered subtle and exceptional histrionic opportunities, and each member of the cast took a most creditable advantage of them. The play was presented twice, on Friday evening, June 1, and a week later, at the Junior Day Matinee.

ONE of the pleasant things to remember about the early days of the reorganized University of Chicago was the strong sense of unity and coöperation that existed among its members. This feeling was, indeed, so strong that it on occasion did away with the class distinctions that existed on paper between fraternity and non-fraternity men, and between students and faculty. In those days the University was ambitious.

One result of those ambitious days was the University of Chicago Settlement. It was founded in 1894, and was an immense success from the start; but the burden of its financial support was for a time almost more than the young university could stagger under. One year a group of head professors carried it by a course of parlor lectures on the North Side. Then the Settlement League was formed and things went better, but not well. Finally, someone had the idea of bringing together all the powers of the University community, religious, social, artistic, financial—faculty, students and wives—in one grand concentration for the salvation of the Settlement. Out of this concentration came that series of All-University productions, of which "The Deceitful Dean" was the first and perhaps the most characteristic. "The Deceitful Dean" was the work of several eminent hands—left hands, presumably, set free for the moment to satirize the work of constructive education which the right hands were doing. The parts were taken by the leading men in college—nearly every important figure about the campus or on Marshall Field found an interstice in the loosely built play through which he reached, if only for a moment, the stage in the old gymnasium. The best talent in the University was expended in making the scenery and properties, and in inducing people to advertise in the programme. And finally, everyone who was not on the stage was in the audience. The show thus represented a supreme moment in the University's consciousness of itself, and loyalty to itself, and coöperative goodwill toward itself.

I am aware that no one will know exactly what I have in mind, except those who remember the first performance of "The Deceitful Dean." Those who had a part in the revival, however, will be able to guess at it. Indeed, one reason for the revival was a feeling, among those who remembered, that it would be possible, and good to have again, something of the spirit that marked the University in its earlier days.

And that feeling met with an immediate and most generous response. The ladies of the Settlement League toiled as they had toiled in years past. Busy alumni forgot important interests committed to them, and clamored for more rehearsals. The Blackfriars put aside their plans; and the University choir interrupted its practice of "Old Hundred" to learn "A Hot Time," and "The Man that Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo." A group of Freshmen sacrificed their physical culture to training for the beauty contest; and everybody cheerfully accepted conditions and "flunks" so that the work might go on.

Thus it is not too much to say that the chief success of the revival was spiritual rather than artistic, or financial. But it should be immediately added that in the latter respects the results were notable. The performances were as good college shows as one could wish for—as full of the pleasure-giving quality, the happy humor of college life. The total net proceeds were nearly $2,500.

In speaking of the production in detail, the critic must fall back upon the privilege of the old playgoer, and indulge in comparisons. No one who saw the old show can ever forget the brilliant recklessness of the Dean—and yet, if anything could be better than Perry Payne's interpretation of the title rôle it was Clarence McCarthy's. Similarly, if anything could displace from our minds Victor Sincere's heart-breaking rendering of Harold Heartbreaker, in the old opera, it would be Nevins' glorious singing of that hero's song in the revival. Henry Adkinson seemed to have exhausted the possibilities of the part of Bloodsucker, until that genial comedian, J. M. Hill, discovered a few more. As for Percy Eckhart, who returned to fill his old part, he remains the best Gee Whizzer ever seen, and a similar verdict must be passed upon Frank Anderson, as Martin Dooley, and Stacey Mosser as Polly Plunger. Hunt Henry, who succeeded Marvin Gaylord as Widifred Worthington, was physically and vocally superior even to the severe requirements of his part. It is safe to say that no one could hear his voice in the beautiful duet:

My advice to the young is ever
Learn to fritter your time away, without deterioration of character. As Tabitha Teachem, Bernard Bell was perhaps inferior to Scott Brown in virile vocalization, but he was certainly superior in the maidenly coyness, and insinuating conquetry so essential to the part.

R. E. Hunter and F. M. Orchard as the Anthropomorphic Automate were truer to life than Phil Allen and Ray, of the former generation. Cuppy as premiere danseuse was facile princeps in dancing, and hors concours in beauty. The ballet was a dream of youthful loveliness, and in every way eligible (externally) for public appearance. The chief new part in the opera, that of Prof. Y. Lactic, the "uplift" coach, was written with the peculiar gifts of Adolph Pierrot in mind, and was almost worthy of them. His song, "The Higher Life," was very nearly the hit of the evening.

The Good-natured Man

"THE GOOD-NATURED MAN," by Oliver Goldsmith, was presented by the dramatic club on Friday evening, January 25, 1907, in Mandel Hall. It had always been the custom of the club to give two plays each year, one about the beginning of the Winter quarter and one in the Spring on Junior Day. For sufficient reasons no Winter play had been given last year "The Good-Natured Man," therefore, coming two years after the last of Winter plays offered, was regarded as more or less of a test as to the advisability of continuing the club's former program of a double bill each season. That it stood the test most favorably is the general opinion; and on its account the club's former plan will no doubt be re-established.

To attempt the production of "The Good-Natured Man" seemed to a few of the club members and many friends to be somewhat pretentious. The play had never been attempted before by any prominent amateur organization, and competent critics had declared such a presentation impossible. With the advice of the Public Speaking Department, however, the club decided to produce the play, and, thereby, to prove its amateur supremacy. Preparations were put under way early in the Fall; but, almost as early, the play was seen to be a most difficult comedy. The quaint, delicate situations, the striking characters, together with its peculiar, wordy construction, presented obstacles that began to seem insurmountable. As the time for presentation drew nearer the dimensions of the task grew larger. It commenced to look like a white elephant.

At last, three weeks before the play, the services of Mr. Bartley Cushing, chiefly responsible for several dramatic club and all Blackfriar successes, were enlisted. Moving about like barnstormers, rehearsal after rehearsal was held in almost every available place on the campus. Coaching and drilling grew more and more strenuous, and then—the white elephant began to move. By the time of the dress rehearsal he had been removed entirely from the club's hands. When the curtain fell upon the last act of the presentation another triumph had been scored by the University of Chicago Dramatic Club.

An unusual feature of the cast was that it was composed almost entirely of those who had been recently initiated into the club. Anxious to win their spurs, and urged on by tradition and the coach, they threw themselves into the work with a vim and vigor unbounded. What their efforts achieved is better left for those who composed the delighted audience to relate. Thus far the club had always been very successful in its many difficult undertakings; but it remained for such an undertaking as "The Good-Natured Man" to prove it absolutely unrelated to any such thing as failure.

What the club will offer in the spring is, as yet, uncertain; but some modern comedy, like that presented last year, will probably be chosen. The club has always favored comedies, which, indeed, seem best suited to its work. As the years have gone by the club's standard has steadily risen; the trials of each Fall and Spring have always resulted in a beneficial increase in membership whenever such increase was necessary; and to-day the club is considered one of the best of college dramatic organizations.

ORATORY

Resolved, that a progressive inheritance tax should be levied by the federal government, constitutionality conceded.

THE DEBATING SEASON OF 1906–1907, while perhaps successful as to general results, can hardly be said to have yielded many victories for the University of Chicago. This was the first year of the league formed by Michigan, Northwestern, and Chicago, and under the new schedule teams from the University of Chicago debated with Northwestern University at Mandel Hall and with the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. The debates occurred on the same night, January 18, and the same question was debated by the teams of the three institutions. Chicago had the affirmative in the contest at home and the negative abroad, and, notwithstanding the able work of her representatives, the decision was adverse in both cases.

The question debated this year, that of the advisability of a federal inheritance tax, was one of unusual interest and some comfort is found in the fact that the contests of this year resulted in a careful study of this important problem. The eighteen speeches prepared on this question must form a considerable contribution to the literature on the subject.

Of the debaters on the teams of this year H. G. Moulton and D. S. Eisendrath were from the colleges while Sidney Lyon, R. M. Davis, V. E. Keyes and A. R. Colgrove represented the Law School. The efforts of these men in behalf of university debating are worthy of all praise.

It appears to be the opinion of those interested in this branch of the university life that the candidates for the teams should be drawn more and more from the undergraduate body, and in pursuance of this view it is thought that debating in the Colleges will be conducted on a larger scale next year than ever before. Efforts are being made to that end, and it is believed that if the practice of regular debating in the Colleges is developed Chicago may expect a larger share of victories in the future.

THE YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN LEAGUE seeks to promote Christian fellowship among the women of the University. The League room, 1 Lexington Hall, is always open for use. New students coming into the University are welcomed and assisted in finding rooms and boarding places. Bible and Mission Study classes are conducted. Religious meetings are held once a week on Wednesday mornings, and once in two weeks on Tuesday afternoons. Some of the speakers during the year have been Dean Vincent, Dr. Henderson, Rev. Herman Page, Miss Bertha Condé and Miss Myra Reynolds. Visits have been made to Hull House and work has been done at the University Settlement, the Association House and the Home for Incurables.

On April 27–28, the Fourth Annual Metropolitan Cabinet Conference met at the University at the invitation of the League. The Conference dinner was given in Hutchinson Hall, Friday evening, April 27. Among the guests on that occasion were Miss Harriet Broad, State Secretary for Illinois, Mrs. J. J. Tufts, of the Illinois State Committee, and Miss Ruth Paxson, National Student Secretary.

The Quadrangle Fete was held on May 19, under the auspices of the League for the benefit of the Summer Conference fund. The Conference was held at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 31 to September 11. The League sent twenty-two delegates, this being the largest delegation in attendance.

The Freshman Frolic was given October 4, the evening's entertainment including a vaudeville performance in the Reynolds Club theatre. On October 13, the League was assisted by the Young Men's Christian Association in an all-University reception given at the Reynolds Club.

Twenty delegates attended the State Convention at Champaign, November 1–4.

On January 24 the Annual Membership dinner was given. Among the speakers of the evening were Mrs. L. Wilbur Messer, Dr. Shailer Mathews and Rev. Carter Helm Jones.

The Alumni Association on January 19, 1907, was incorporated under the laws of the State of Illinois with the following object. "To advance the interests, influence, and efficiency of the University of Chicago; to promote acquaintance among the graduates, and to strengthen the connection between the alumni and their Alma Mater by various publications, meetings and other means."

The Association's present activity includes the extension of the Alumni Library where interesting pictures of the University and its prominent alumni and former students, views of ceremonies and events in the University's history, and publications of alumni and former students may be filed.

The greatest development, however, is to be found in the establishment of The Chicago Alumni Magazine. This publication is a monthly news and literary magazine devoted to the interests of the University, the student body, and alumni and former students.

It is the official organ of the Alumni Association, and of all branch and affiliated bodies of the alumni. It contains each month news of personal interest concerning the alumni and former students. This news is provided by class secretary-reporters for each class from '62 to the present day.

Through its recognized official status the Magazine is able to reflect accurately the current progress of the University and the events of large importance in the life of the student body. It is used in a certain sense as an organ by the athletic department of the University and serves not only to keep the alumni and former students in touch with the University's athletic life but to help create sentiment especially in the Middle West along the line of athletic reform.

The Magazine is not only a book of current information but also a depository of historical and biographical interest concerning the University, the Alumni Association, the alumni and former students.

Each month leading articles appear which discuss the important changes in the college world and the new developments in the life of the University of Chicago. The Magazine aims to analyze the trend of various movements in the University and to have the alumni discuss freely and frankly the policies and problems of the institution in all its departments.

Schuetze, Dr. Caroline Medger and Mr. F. H. Griswold.

The Union has served as hostess for the Senior High School girls of Chicago, The Chicago Association of Collegiate Alumnae, The National Council of Jewish Women, The State Federation of Women's Clubs, The National American Woman Suffrage Association, The Children's Chorus and Children's Clubs of the University Settlement. Its special social features have been dances open to all the University, a Thanksgiving spread and general receptions.

Special exhibits have been held of Arts and Crafts, Consumer's League, and Japanese prints. Two interpretative recitals of orchestral programs and gallery tours of the Art Institute have been other features of the program.

The University Settlement

In 1894 the University of Chicago settlement was started in the district back of the Yards with one resident in a small flat. Since then, through the loyalty and enthusiasm of its many supporters, the movement has progressed very rapidly, and the Settlement has grown to a group of over ten residents, a comfortable club house, and a splendid gymnasium, costing over $40,000. The community is an industrial one wherein, besides the wretched conditions of the neighborhood, sickness, casual work, and intemperance, resulting in almost chronic poverty, are factors with which the Settlement must constantly reckon. Many foreign speaking boys and girls that heretofore have gone to work as soon as they were confirmed, or have wasted their time running about on the streets until they were of legal age, are now kept in school and given opportunities for better health and a good education. Every institution that can supply a need is coöperated with by the Settlement, and agencies are called upon for relieving the necessities of the poor.

The community, as a whole, is fairly well covered by various voluntary organizations of the Settlement, the usual clubs and classes for older women, for young men and women, and for boys and girls having established.

The chief work and value of the Settlement has been to make the community realize certain needs, and then to coöperate with the neighborhood in getting these needs filled. The result of its efforts can easily be seen. By a petition to the Board of Education the introduction of manual training in the public schools near by was obtained. The John Hamline fellowship was secured, the beneficiary of which is to live at the Settlement and to work in the Hamline School and organize its social possibilities in coöperation with the teachers and principal. The need of a place for social and physical recreation was supplied by the N. S. Davis Square.

Much credit must be given to the ladies of the Settlement League, who not only raised the money promised toward the support of the settlement, but also generously furnished the new house. The Settlement is supported also by Faculty subscriptions, University Sunday service collections and outside subscriptions.

The Pen Club

The Pen Club, composed mainly of men who are fitting themselves for literary or journalistic careers, gives fortnightly informal dinners either at the University or at downtown clubs and hotels, at which are entertained famous journalists, poets and novelists. These affairs are always highly enjoyable and acquaint the members with the actual conditions of work in their chosen field.

COMMONWEALTH CLUB

THE COMMONWEALTH CLUB is an expression of the belief on the part of its organizers and members that college men should get some inspiration and training along the lines of citizenship. It is one of the purposes of the Commonwealth Club to cultivate the unselfish point of view; to make the idea of the common good the ideal of the individual citizen.

The movement of which the Commonwealth Club is a part is intercollegiate in extent. The name of the national organization is The Intercollegiate Civic League, and last year a national convention of the organization was held in New York, the delegates going later to Washington to receive an indorsement of the movement from President Roosevelt.

ATHLETICS

Amos Alonzo Stagg

LAST NOVEMBER, when the name of Eckersall was in every mouth, an impertinent reporter ventured to shake our faith in the permanence of athletic reputations by raising the query as to what had become of a young man of the name of Hershberger—or something equally strange—whose leg was once worshiped by an idolatrous generation like another golden calf. Such tactless questions bring our world tumbling about our ears, and reduce the most heroic college captain to almost human stature. And yet is athletic fame so much more ephemeral than that achieved in other human activities? What is the evidence of the poets and philosophers on this point? Was it but the faded memory of an ancient Parisian master of fence which led Villon to raise that poignant inquiry of his about the snows of yesteryear?

Last year's snows have been borne to the ocean, and last year's athletic records are threatened by a new crop of aspirants, but the fame of Amos Alonzo Stagg has gone on these twenty years, defying the enmity of time. Not that his fame of to-day is of exactly the same kind as when his name was first featured in head lines. Mr. Stagg's good fortune—or wisdom—was to have learned early that fame was a thing with which you must suit yourself as with clothes, not confusing the times and the seasons and discreetly putting away your summer wear with the advent of fall. Having reached the top of the ladder of collegiate fame he saw that he should have to come down or be pushed off. He came down. That is a characteristic piece of that sterling common sense which his whole career illustrates. For a time he pondered the situation with care, until convinced that we are set in this world to cultivate each of us his special talent, he modestly declared that he was ready to teach others to climb the athletic ladder which he had just abandoned. Fortune ruled that he should be drawn at this critical moment into the orbit of our late President. He came to the University of Chicago, showed new generations of young men how to turn the trick in football, base ball, and on the track, and his fame, just as it was about to be snuffed out, was relit and has burned steadily on.

But of this latterday fame there is little need to speak. The sporting editors, who minister to immense Sunday congregations with words of good cheer proclaimed in sheets of delicately aesthetic hue, are professionally interested in keeping it alive. I would recall here briefly the bygone days, when Mr. Stagg had the years and looks of, say, Captain Templeton, and Captain Templeton had neither years nor looks to speak of. Here, by way of record, is a simple chronology. Mr. Stagg entered Yale College in 1884; 1888, took his A. B. degree; 1888–90, continued at Yale doing graduate and theological work; 1890–92, studied and directed athletics at the Y.M.C.A. Training School of Springfield, Mass.; 1892, came west in charge of the athletic department of the new University of Chicago. The period from 1884 to 1890 belongs to Yale. For hundreds of young men, who worked and played at New Haven in those years, the name of Stagg recalls some of their most vivid college moments. Can they forget the excitement of the college town on the eve of a great contest, the long, impassioned suspense on the field, and the wild shout of relief at the end? The writer can recall a June day with bright sunshine lying on the wide Yale field and its girdle of woods, with a tumultuous commencement crowd camped in sweeping semi-circle round the diamond, while in the pitcher's box, focus of all eyes, stands a stocky, masterful lad, who, capless and with touseled shock of hair, surveys imperturbably the full bases before he delivers the ball which, by sending another man to first, will force in a run and give the game to the enemy. On such occasions mere pitching skill is nothing without the great gift of character showing in control and resolution. And on that far-off June day "the enemy" struck out, and for the great crowd of visitors, whom festive June draws annually to New Haven, commencement week was made radiant by a victory over Harvard.

The pitcher has long laid aside his baseball suit, and the football player his padded togs; Mr. Stagg is now a captain emeritus, in our academic dialect. But if he continues to turn out winning teams in the sports in which he himself once shone, and if he has acquired a preeminent position in the whole field of western athletics, his success must be traced not to his physical prowess, but to those qualities of character by which he brought to his college five successive base ball championships. Amos Alonzo Stagg has never distinguished himself greatly in scholarship, nor does he shine, or aspire to shine, in the social arts of the drawing room, but he is admirable in the work which he has chosen, work which holds him up before a community of healthy undergraduates, engaged in out-of-door games, as a living example of grit, applied science, and fair play.

The glory of a Football Championship in 1905 had hardly passed from the horizon before a dark cloud was cast upon the whole athletic situation in the West. War had been declared by the Conference Colleges—a sort of Revolution! Commercialism in athletics was the cause of the conflict. The upheaval, bitter as it was, lasted only a short time, and truce was soon declared. Delegates from all nine provinces had a two-day session, and when the terms of peace were named, the community held its breath—all kinds of reforms had been effected. Schedules were limited to five games, training tables were forbidden, and a regular staff of officials was selected. No team was allowed to begin practice before the opening of school. To preclude the possibility of deciding a championship, Michigan, Wisconsin and Chicago had no games scheduled with one another. Then came a Period of Reconstruction. The Rules of Football were radically amended to secure more open play and a cleaner game, while the Faculties of the various Universities, especially Chicago, added some legislation of their own which shot the Purity Barometer up thirty or forty degrees. With this new regime in view, the opening of the Football Season of 1906 was anxiously awaited.

Purdue was first on Chicago's schedule. There was much speculation as to what the new game would "look like." Some ventured to predict that it would be as interesting as ping-pong, only not so rough; others hoped that it might at least resemble the old game; but few believed that any improvement would follow. The result of the first game restored confidence. Chicago ran all over Purdue, and the game assured lovers of football that although the style of play had been radically changed, yet the best qualities of the game had been preserved.

Jimmy Sheldon, with his band of Hoosiers, came next. The strength of Indiana's team the year previous had not been forgotten, and a hard game was predicted. And so it was. Indiana played Chicago to a standstill during the first half, but our men were in better condition and managed to run up several points on Indiana before the final whistle blew.

A week's intermission, and then the big game of the year — Minnesota. General Stagg, with a coterie of Aides de Camp, had journeyed all the way to Minneapolis to see what Doc. Williams had up his sleeve, and came back with reports that it was a Royal Flush. But Nebraska had held the Gophers down to a 13–0 score the week before, and Nebraska had been defeated by Ames. That gave the rooters a basis upon which to figure out a victory, and they all felt confident of the result. But Jupiter Pluvius cut a big swath in their calculations. The game was played in a driving rain, and the beautiful green gridiron of the day before took on the aspect of a freshly-plowed corn field. Minnesota won by a score of 4–2. That's all!

Interest in the next two games was threatened for a while because the climax came too early in the season. But when it became known that a series of spectacular plays which had been prepared by Mr. Stagg for the Minnesota game—but which had not been used because of the slippery field—were to be tried on Illinois, rooters again took notice. And they were not disappointed. The game was a revelation. Not until then had the full possibilities under the new rules been thrown open to the public. The Old Man had devised plays by the score, all of which succeeded in completely bewildering Illinois. It was a slaughter of the first degree—pitiful, pathetic—yet glorious, from a Chicago point of view. Captain Eckersall, Walker, Parry, Iddings and Steffen simply outdid themselves. Five goals from the field were the least of Eckie's achievements. His punting, passing and running with the ball kept the spectators on their feet most of the time, fairly howling with excitement. Walker dashed from end to end, carrying the ball for long gains. Steffen worried the Illinois ends clear out of their wits with his shoestring tricks, while Iddings, aided by the linemen, found holes twenty feet wide, and nobody waiting on the other side. In fact, the whole team worked like a well oiled machine, executing long passes, criss-crosses and almost any old play that they attempted, without a flaw. The score might just as well have been 100 to 0 as 63 to 0, had not Mr. Stagg chosen to give all the substitutes a chance.

The last game of the season, with Nebraska, was almost a foregone conclusion. The same style of play as had characterized the game with Illinois prevailed. Nebraska, however, had some tricks of their own which were successful at times, and finally resulted in a score. The Cornhuskers showed more flash than did Illinois, both on offense and defense; it was only the strength of Chicago's team that made the game one-sided. When the whistle blew the scoreboard read: Chicago 38, Nebraska 5.

Thus ended the Football Season of 1906. The new style of game had established itself as a success, with Chicago as its leading exponent, in the West, at least. Coaches all over the country had experimented, but many of them failed to adapt themselves to the amendments of the rules, and lost by clinging to the old game. Mr. Stagg, perhaps above all others, saw the vast possibilities in the new style of play. He abandoned the old game entirely and built a team, based on speed, which played nothing but 1906 football. There was no defense in the West that could cope with Chicago's offense successfully on a dry field. The speed, accuracy and dash with which the team played, brought forth comments from all critics of the game.

The close of the season but reminded us that we had lost a quartet of star players. Eckersall, the most versatile football player that ever wore a "C," finished his fourth year of competition. It was fitting that he should close his career under the new rules, for however brilliantly he may have shown before, the season of 1906 marked the height of his success as a player. The game was exactly suited for his style of play, and he realized the possibilities that lay before him. Fred Walker, who had previously played behind the line, was shifted to end, and in a single season learned to play the position so well that he earned for himself the title of All-Western End. He distinguished himself by playing a remarkably consistent game both on offense and defense. Russell continued the good work of the previous year. His achievements were not of the spectacular order, for he played in the line, but his strength was always felt, especially on defense. Parry was the other "C" man who closed his football career. His work was most noticeable at tackle, whenever he played that position. He, too, was picked on the All-Western Team, and deservedly so, for Parry was a type of player who, in spite of his weight, had enough speed to be well fitted for the game. Of the younger members of the team, Steffen and Iddings deserve much credit. They proved themselves to be crafty players and great things may be expected of them the coming season.

A survey of the Football Season would not be complete without mention of the "Purity Banquets" which preceded each game. This custom was an innovation at Chicago, the object of which was to bring the men of the two teams in close touch before the contest, and thereby to create a more friendly and wholesome spirit of rivalry. The idea was conceived some time ago, but was not carried out until this year. It is to be hoped that Chicago will again have been instrumental in starting a movement which will be adopted and carried out at every university in the West.

Here's to Lon Stagg, the Team, and the Football Season of '06!

TRACK

Martyred to Harmony

The Sacrifice of a Track Season to the Cause of Purity in Athletics.

Track Championships go down as cherished memories, while we usually try to forget the unsuccessful seasons. There is one gloomy track season, however, that is destined to go down in Chicago history as a true example of chivalrous martyrdom to the cause of pure athletics in the West, the season of 1906. The cheering for the great championship track team of 1905 had hardly died away before Coach Stagg began to look toward the next year. Marshall Field had been deserted late in the afternoon of the Conference meet, and the "Old Man" sat on one of the field benches thoughtfully biting his finger nails. "Wat's the throuble, Misther Stagg," said Jimmy Towhig. But Mr. Stagg's looks belied the fact that the team had just won a championship. At last he said: "Jimmy, I was just thinking about next year. Athletics are getting pretty rank in this country and there soon won't be any intercollegiate athletic morals at all unless somebody takes a stand. First of all, the other universities must be put in a better mood, and the only way to accomplish that is to let them win from us. I don't see how we can lose any meets next year with the present prospects unless we resort to revolutionary measures. Jimmy, I see that this must be done and I am going to call the boys together and ask them to enter into the spirit of the plan and pledge themselves to a losing campaign."

Jimmy failed to grasp the full import of the "Old Man's" philosophy, and as he walked away to the shanty he, too, failed to show indications of a two-hours-old championship. Coach Stagg, satisfied with the thought of Chicago's placing sportmanship above victory, but somewhat gloomy, nevertheless at the prospect for the next year, rode slowly up Fifty-seventh Street on his wheel, with Alonzo Junior running along beside him.

The next day all the track men were called together and made partakers in the new plan. After an explanation by Coach Stagg, all reluctantly consented to sacrifice their ambitions for another track championship and consecrate their energies toward uplifting athletics by gracefully losing their events in every case where suspicion would not be aroused. It was discovered, on figuring up the "dope," however, that it would be impossible to lose without risking suspicion if all the eligibles were allowed to return to the University and compete the next year. It was accordingly agreed that some of the men should be asked to drop out for a year, the decision to be made by drawing lots.

San Lyon drew the first "lemon," but he took his medicine bravely and ended his career as a runner without a whimper. Should anyone question him as to why he was staying out it was provided that he should have the choice of three answers, for variety: weak heart, tonsilitis, and parental objection. Jimmy Lightbody and Ray Quigley were the only others to draw the extreme punishment of total abstinence from running on the team. They were given the unsavory excuse of "ineligibility" to tell to their questioning friends. Eckersall, Captain Parry and Wilkins were all given "conditional lemons," which allowed them to hang on the edge and be willing to do their worst or stay off the team for any particular meets that the team would be in danger of winning. The eliminating process had worked successfully, for out if the 56 points won in the Conference the year before only 11 were represented in the available material.

Illinois was to be met at Champaign on February 17 and the boys followed their instruction remarkably, being trounced by the Illini by a score of 61 to 25. By agreement any member of the team who should win a first place was to be forced to walk back to Chicago, and not a single clear first was scored by the Maroon. Eck tied for first in the dash, but he was let off with a severe lecture and the universal disdain of his teammates. In the return meet with Illinois at Chicago the team did not behave so well. Whether the men lost their nerve or were merely affected by stage fright could not be learned, but it is a fact that Chicago was ahead of Illinois up to the relay, the last event on the program. The responsibility devolved upon Norman Barker, who ran last. He had a lead and he couldn't figure how he could lose and save the day. He didn't know how to run slow, so on the third lap he made a heroic effort and fell, allowing Illinois to barely win the race and thus win the meet. "How could the team lose to Wisconsin?" was the next proposition. The "Old Man" could see no graceful way out of this, so he had the meet called off.

On April 20, Coach Stagg returned from the South with the bear story of unimproved health. To avoid suspicion he had the training table started, with orders to Mrs. Burton to feed the men everything that wasn't good for them. Preparation for the Illinois outdoor meet went on and the men improved wonderfully in spite of the "Old Man's" efforts to keep them down. It did not seem possible to lose this meet, but again Norman Barker saved the day by straining a tendon and putting himself out of the running just before the meet, and Illinois won. On May 12 came the Wisconsin meet and there was absolutely no hope of losing that, try as the team would, so Chicago was forced to take a reluctant victory.

Temptation was greater to win the Michigan meet on May 19, but the nobler tendencies of the men prevailed and by heroic measures Michigan was allowed to take the honors, $69\frac{1}{2}$ to $46\frac{1}{2}$. Ned Merriam showed his absolute loyalty to the cause by throwing up his hands and stopping ten yards short of the tape in the two-twenty, with the explanation that he thought he had crossed the line.

Minnesota on the 28th was a problem. Coach Stagg didn't have much hope of losing this meet, but he started well by taking only a handful of men to Minneapolis. After looking over the Minnesota team he had still less hope of a defeat, so he had the meet postponed to Monday (on account of rain) to give him time to plan a defeat. It was of no avail, however, for the men would not break training in the meantime, as he had hoped they would, and on Monday Chicago's hopes were again blighted by having to win from Minnesota, 82 to 44.

All eyes were now on the Conference, and the "Old Man" had difficulty in keeping the team to its purpose. To be on the safe side Coach Stagg arranged to have the meet at Evanston. Ned Merriam had been playing his rôle exceptionally well in all the earlier meets, and as a special reward Coach Stagg allowed him to win the quarter from Waller in :50 flat. Parry also, as captain of the team, was permitted to win the hammer throw. This time Merrill, Taylor and Steffen were "the goats;" according to instructions Merrill barely showed in the dash, Steffen didn't qualify in the hurdles, and Tommy Taylor got "boxed" in the quarter. It is reported that Mr. Stagg had a special arrangment with Johnny Garrels of Michigan, whereby the latter was to take all the points he could from the Chicago team. When the time for the relay came the meet was safe in the hands of Michigan, and Coach Stagg consented to let the men win the final event and carry home one banner to represent the season's work. The final score of the meet stood: Michigan 62$\frac{4}{5}$, Chicago 20$\frac{4}{5}$.

The crowds of rooters had left the field and the special trains could be heard in the distance puffing their way back to the city. Jimmy Towhig, dressed in his finest, was crossing the field in the direction of the Chicago tent, apparently disgusted with life. A familiar voice called out: "What's the matter, Jimmy? Didn't it come out all right?" Jimmy turned to find Coach Stagg sitting nearby on a camp stool. "I know it came hard, Jimmy," he said; "but we had to do it." (Noise similar to that accompanying a war dance at this point emanated from the Michigan tent.) The "Old Man" bit his tongue. "If they knew how it happened, they wouldn't appreciate it so thoroughly," he said. "If their good spirits keep up maybe it will be our turn next year."

Chicago's Representatives in the Olympic Games

LAST WINTER, when the announcement was made that the United States was to be represented by an athletic team at the Olympic Games at Athens, the University public was glad to note that two of its men, Lightbody and Friend, had been chosen. The team was picked on the basis of previous merit, irrespective of locality or athletic affiliation.

The team sailed from New York early in April, and after a sixteen-day trip arrived at Athens only three days before the games. To go into detail regarding the happenings of that ten-day festivity would require far more space than can be allotted here. In a word, it may be said that the Olympic Games of 1906 surpassed by far any event that has ever been held in the athletic world. Athens was fairly buzzing with excitement; 50,000 visitors from all over the world added to the spirit of the occasion. Royalty from all over Europe gave color to the games. Olympic games have been held in France and the United States, but on both occasions they have seemed out of place. The historic setting of Athens, with its field of Marathon, its Acropolis and its Stadium, marks that city as the only appropriate place to hold the games.

Almost every civilized country in the world was represented by a team. About 1,200 men took part in the various events. America, with her team of 35, carried off first honors, winning a total of 75 points. Great Britain, including all of her dominions, was second with 37 points. Sweden and Greece followed in close order, with 27 and 25 points, respectively.

Lightbody brought honor to the University by defeating the entire field, including the crack Englishmen, in the 1500-meter race. This was England's strong event, and was at no time conceded to anyone else. Lightbody also ran a close second in the 800-meter run. Friend scored a third place in the broad jump, yielding only to O'Connor, who holds the world's record for that event, and Prinstein, who holds the American record. After winning his preliminary heat, Friend fell on the eighth hurdle in the finals.

After a two weeks' stay in Athens, the majority of the team returned to America. Lightbody and Friend, however, had been invited to compete in the Hungarian championships at Budapest, and accepted the invitation. Lightbody won the 440, 880, and mile runs, breaking Hungarian records in all three events. Friend won the 100-yard dash, 120-yard hurdles and broad jump, also breaking two records. Between them they scored enough points to win the meet.

After a two weeks' stay in Budapest, Friend and Lightbody started on a jaunt through Europe, stopping off at Prague long enough to carry away the Austrian championships by winning the same events as at Budapest. They returned to the United States the following summer.

The Chicago Baseball Season of 1906

THE season of 1906 opened with six old men back: Captain Baird, Ex-captain Harper, Eckersall, Walker, Templeton, and Abbott. Immediately after Christmas vacation indoor practice was begun, with Captain Baird as coach. A few weeks later, however, Mr. Dickinson, formerly of Tufts College, was placed in charge of the squad by Mr. Stagg.

By the last of March the squad was able to get out of doors. Mr. Dickinson left college at this time and again the additional duties of coaching fell upon Captain Baird. There were few players of any caliber out for the team and it was a case of all get together and work.

The race for the Western Championship was practically between Chicago, Michigan, and Illinois; Wisconsin not being represented in baseball owing to its athletic renovation and Minnesota putting out its first real team in several seasons. Our schedule called for a game with Amherst, always strong among eastern colleges, four games with Northwestern, three with Minnesota, one with Oberlin, and a series of four games apiece with Michigan and Illinois. Michigan, by defeating Illinois and breaking even with Chicago, pulled out the championship when Chicago lost to Illinois. The other games presented an unbroken line of victories for Chicago. Amherst starting its western invasion with a 9 to 1 victory over Michigan was badly beaten the next day by Chicago, a fact which gave Chicago baseball a standing among eastern colleges which few in the West realize.

But the Oberlin game—sweet memory—will long be recalled by the 1906 baseball team. Oberlin girls can certainly entertain, and the midweek visit there was not marred by any feelings of hostility at parting, because of a heavy rain. Yet it was a glorious "game" and each member of the team will always count it a Chicago victory, in which Captain Baird holds the honors for having made the greatest number of "hits;"—Messrs. Eckersall, Templeton, and Walker were not far behind their captain, all playing a star game that day.

Taken all in all the Chicago baseball team of 1906 was good, but did not seem to strike its pace until late in the season, when they began batting, fielding and winning games like champions. The defeat of Michigan in the last two games showed what it might have done had the season been a little longer. The team was a unit and it was team work that won the games. Perhaps the greatest improvement was shown by the battery, Walker and Gaarde, who were in 13 of the 15 games played. The season of 1906 closed the baseball career through graduation or conference ruling of Captain Baird, Harper, Paul, Eckersall, Nowles, and Abbott. Templeton was elected captain for 1907 just before the last trip.

Varsity Aquatics

Coach Knudson's excellent work brought out a winning swimming team in 1907, the defeat of Wisconsin and Illinois giving Chicago the Western Intercollegiate Aquatic and Water Polo championships. In addition to this the Polo team secured a second place in the Central Division of the A. A. U., the championship contests for which were held at the Chicago Athletic Association in March, the C. A. A. sextet winning from the Maroon team by the score of 4 to 0.

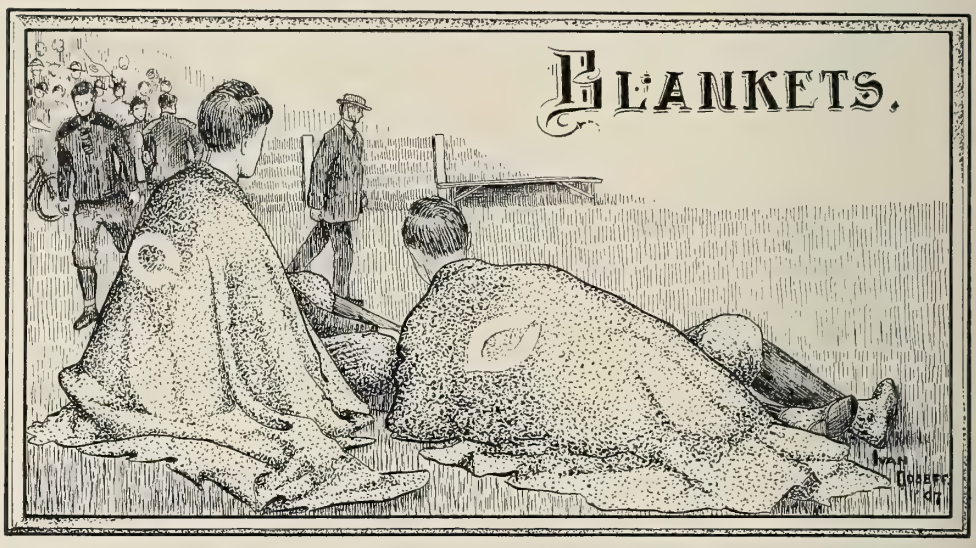
During the fall quarter of 1906 there was a greater interest taken in soccer football than there was a year ago. A team was picked from the squad to represent the University in games with the Wanderers' Club, Englewood High School, and the Hyde Park Blues. The Wanderers' won their game, 3–0; the University beat Englewood High School, 6–1; and the Hyde Park Blues won their game, 1–0.



The "C" blankets were given to the following men during the Spring, 1906.

WOMEN'S

Woman's Athletic Association

Several events have taken place which make this year an unusually successful one for the Women's Athletic Association. While its various activities have often taken social form, it has really been a great inspiration in arousing and maintaining interest in athletics and has strongly emphasized the happy combination of social events and athletics which is so desirable.

Chief among these events was the second Varsity carnival, which was given for the benefit of the athletic fund, which is used to provide emblems and trophies for the women's athletic teams. A significant feature of the carnival was the coöperation of the various colleges, each of which maintained a booth. The carnival was most successful, both financially and socially. In addition to paying all expenses, one hundred fifty dollars was added to the athletic fund, one hundred dollars to the Harper Memorial Fund, and all of the indebtedness of the Association was paid off.

The gymnastic contest in March was characterized by a larger number of entries than ever before; the contests were much closer because of the number of better trained and more interested contestants. A new feature of the contest was the inter-college sack, potato, club, and relay races.

At the quadrangle fete, the Association gave a May-pole dance, participated in by sixty girls. This was given on the campus, and was repeated by request, at the annual reception of the Halls on Junior College Day.

Another new feature instituted this year was the presentation of a "C" and numerals to every girl who had played in a championship contest of any kind.

The contests have been most successful. A hockey game was played on Marshall Field on Junior College Day by the Philosophy and Arts team against the Literature and Science team, the former winning. This is the first time the women have appeared on Marshall Field in any contest. The annual championship games of hockey, baseball, and basket-ball were won by the Seniors. The Tennis Tournament, with forty entries, was a close contest.

The eighth annual banquet of the Association was held in the gymnasium, and was largely attended. In addition to the usual banners and emblems presented a banner was given to the college winning the gymnastic contest.

At the annual meeting in December the following officers were elected:

Mary F. Heap ..... President
Grace P. Norton ..... Vice-President
Helen F. Peck ..... Secretary-Treasurer

An Historical Statement

THE DIVINITY SCHOOL is really older than the University itself in that it was already existing when the new University was founded.

The Baptist Union Theological Seminary was originally established and is still controlled by the corporation known as "The Baptist Theological Union, located at Chicago." The institution was fully organized in 1867, and for twenty-five years enjoyed an uninterrupted prosperity. The number of students, attracted from all parts of the country, increased annually; able scholars were enrolled on the faculty of instruction; men of eminent business ability and large liberality managed the finances and provided the buildings, libraries, and endowments.

When Mr. Rockefeller made his first subscription of $1,000,000 to the University, he made it a condition of the gift that the Seminary should become the Divinity School of the University. In order to realize this condition he further stipulated that $100,000 of his subscription should be used for the erection of a building for the Seminary on the University campus, and that $100,000 of it should be set apart for the further endowment of the Seminary. In keeping with these requirements Articles of Agreement were entered into between the Boards of the two institutions by which the Theological Seminary became the Divinity School of the University of Chicago.

From the standpoint of the students in the Divinity School this year has been very precious. In early December fourteen of our number attended the tri-ennial Convention of Divinity Students at Dayton, Ohio, where we were royally entertained by the friends of the University, while inspired and encouraged from the platform by some of the world's greatest speakers. On December 21 there was held another large conference on Religious Education. We participated in the Inter-Seminary Banquet March 7. Nor will we soon forget the conference on Personal Religion, February 24–27.

In athletics the Divinity School has not startled the world, although we have been able to maintain a basket-ball team which has met and played teams from other Divinity Schools in and about Chicago.

Every Tuesday evening, in the parlor of South Divinity Hall has been held a missionary prayer meeting; and on Thursday mornings in Haskell Assembly Room, a "Devotional Half-hour"—both meetings full of inspiration. Never has there been a more delightful Christian fellowship than among the Divinity men during 1906 and 1907

The Students' Association

This Association gathers into one organization the prominent interests of the Divinity students. Its objects as expressed in the constitution are as follows:

To promote the general welfare of the students of the Divinity School; to represent their interests before the Faculty and in the University at large; to coöperate with all forms of Christian activity with which the Association may come into corporate relation.

The Divinity Council

The Divinity Council is the representative body of the Divinity students before the Faculty. It has general charge, on the students' side, of all matters pertaining in common to the Faculty and students. The Council is composed of the officers and chairmen of the several Committees of the Students' Association of the Divinity School.

The Evangelistic Band of the University of Chicago

An organization mostly of Divinity men, who conduct evangelistic services in the churches in and around Chicago. Ideally there are ten men in the Band, all of whom go on each of the Band's trips. Practically the number varies from eight to twelve, and the personnel for each trip is somewhat different.

Five or six trips are made each Winter Quarter, and sometimes a few in the Spring Quarter. On each trip eight meetings are conducted—Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings; Saturday and Sunday afternoons, and Sunday morning. The regular trips for the Winter Quarter, 1907, include Dundee, Hinckley, and Waukegan, Illinois, and Michigan City, Indiana, while special trips took in Sandwich and Barrington, Illinois. The trip to Hinckley, Illinois, is said to be the best in the history of the Evangelistic Band, seventy-one persons deciding to live a Christian life during our thirty hours' work there.

The Semitic Club was originally organized in the Morgan Park Theological Seminary by William Rainey Harper in 1881. For convenience it is divided into two sections, which conduct alternate fortnightly meetings. The subjects considered by the Semitic section are purely technical—such matters as concern men whose chief interest is in linguistic study. The Old Testament section considers subjects of a more popular nature, connected with the study of the Old Testament.

Off the Scalpel

Slams, jabs, knocks and boosts, with profuse apologies understood.

There was a prof. named A. J. C.,
Who took a walk by the raging sea.
He made a grab
At a big red crab!
If he'd pulled him in how glad we'd be!

Dr. Wells: "Mr. Flinn, how do you distinguish between Thrombosis after death and before death?"
Mr. Flinn: "One is post mortem and the other is ante mortem."

Sensations of pain cross in the cord
Our dear old Woelful read,
I'll prick the cat upon this side
You'll think that she is dead.
He gave the cat an awful jab,
Old Tabby gave a howl,
"I guess this is an anomalous cat,"
Said Woelful, with a scowl.

Dr. Dunn: "Mr. Berlin, how long is the spinal cord?"
Mr. Berlin: "Ah———, I don't recall it doctor."

Dr. Wells: "Mr. Eggers, were you born in the United States or Milwaukee?" (Joke.)

Dr. Revell (to class in Histology): "For tomorrow we will start a review on the fifth declension; will each student provide himself with a Latin grammar and lexicon?" (Snores from rear of room.)

LAW

FLOYD R. MECHEM

A True History of the Law School

WHEN William the Conqueror pulled his tugs upon the sand beach off the coast of Kent, the initial step toward founding a Law School at the University of Chicago was taken. He twirled his chin whiskers nervously for a while and then ordered the Bell-hop to call up Lord Coke by 'phone.

"Hello, Coke! Is this you? It just occurred to me that the University of Chicago ought to have a Law School. Are you working now?" "Why, yes," answered Coke. "I've got a Little-ton of stuff to get off here but it won't take long." "When you get through," replied Bill, "drop over here for a minute. I want to talk to you about it." And then they got busy.

They called up old Joe Beale, who was then rusticating at Harvard, by wireless, and ordered him west on the B. & O. to start a Law School at Chicago, with instructions to draw on them. And the faculty has been drawing on Coke ever since.

Joe appeared on the field in the fall of '03 and made the first kick-off. He had a star aggregation with him and played brilliantly for awhile, but had to drop out at the end of the first half. Jim Hall, who had acquired a rep on Leland Stanford's Farm, took Beale's place. Hall whooped things up by working a criss-cross on Michigan right off the reel, by lassoing Pa Mechem, who had been making all of Michigan's gains. Tenney was hired to coach in practice. Ernie Freund, who had a pull with the police power, saw to it that no ruff-necks got into the game. Whit's rapid-fire system of signals at quarter back confused the players for awhile, until somebody singed his whiskers, thus giving his words more ready access to the attentive ear.

Mack, an old Northwestern center, was procured for that position at Chicago and alternated between passing the ball and sitting on the bench. A great deal of trust was placed in him. Bigelow, a live bird from the Philippines, was shipped to Chicago to play tackle. He downed everything that came his way and a few things that didn't. A nice little fellow named Percy, with dimples in his cheeks, was drafted as water carrier, because of his experience in watering stocks for the Western Union.

This bunch has been playing together so long that their team work is perfect. They have gone through several seasons without losing a game and promise to be champions of America before very long.

1907 Law History

OUR illustrious class—and the scribe of such a class must perforce throw modesty to the winds—entered in an appropriate blaze of glory, and our progress since has been one long triumph of mind over matter. During the first months we were conducted through assault and battery and the Early Ames theories by Messrs. Merriam and Canright—with the willing but unnecessary help of the faculty. The greater vocal opportunities of life insurance broke up that combination, but Merriam's mantle was torn to rags in falling on the many aspirants. The front row artillery threw up heavy intrenchments, and made the P'fessors take to cover. Vernier opened with a deadly sharp shooter's fire; Blake's thirteen-inch siege guns boomed incessantly; Bynum kept up a rapid fire of logical queries on the flanks; Lewinsohn raked the decks with a cannonade of large words; while Bennett had the light cavalry ready for instant guerilla service. And the heavy thinkers withdrew to the safe rear.

In this order we survived the iniquities of the last-chance doctrine; we learned to talk uses and the contingent remainder with a double aspect like Indiana spell-binders, and we retired Sergeant Williams without ceremony. In the second half of the year Mr. Mechem taught us that if you wanted a thing well done you had better do it yourself—or hire a lawyer right away; we also learned the difference between law and common sense in crimes, and incidentally that perseverance makes a fine argument, and in damages we saw how often a good court can be misled by a lawyer not up on the Harvard Law Review.

The historian's chief duty, however, is to record the political movements of his time. And we have excelled as brilliantly in officers as we have in scholarship. Eggemeyer was our first president; it was rumored that there was a man of that name in school at the time. But Webb as vice-president, performed all the president's duties—that is, he called the election next year. Secretary Wright kept, and is probably still keeping, the voluminous records. And Lewinsohn managed our funds so capably that he never was even investigated. The council was composed of Messrs. Merriam, Blake, and Gridley, and of the activities of that body too much cannot be said; they placed three (3) new electric lights in artistic nooks about the building, and supplied the smoking room with 1904 magazines,—which are still there.

Our second year was crucial. First there was the Judge, whose lectures were engrossed with a struggle between the fresh-air fiends, endorsed by the bench, and the anti-draft somnambulists, led by Jackson; but by a hard struggle in the last two weeks we got quite a little way into the book. Then there was evidence —but there is a limit to even the historian's vocabulary. Finally there was the annual election. Ashton leading the forces of harmony, captured the gavel; Wilbur became His Superfluity the vice-president; Bennett and Bynum were chosen to do the other work. To Kirkpatrick, Perrin, and Hunter was entrusted the delicate task of keeping us in touch with the faculty; while Radford made our influence felt in athletic circles. The result was a great uplift movement; we had positive spasms of class spirit, and finally we dined memorably at the Quadrangle Club. The banquet was simple, but we had an intellectual feast that should go down to posterity. We were equipped for professional life by more helpful hints than a Sunday supplement can show. The faculty told us how to get clients, how to keep them, how to make the relation mutually profitable; in short, how to cash in on our cum landes.

This last year has been a wild scramble to keep up with the game in corporations and to corner the books for Dr. Freund's brief citations. Also, the latest experiments in practice have been tried on a faithful few of our number and we have found how much you can't learn from a twenty-page case by reading it. A spirit of brotherly love pervaded the class-election and Bennett landed the prize, with Wright, Webb, and Hall to stagger along under the arduous duties with him, and Maple, Canright and "Big" Webb to add their counsel wise.

And now the end draws near. The worthy Dean of the stock room toils night and day to find among us a man that won't get a cum lande, and the Judge shakes up a new hatful of marks in hopes of just one B. There will be an aching void in the Law School when we bang our locker doors for the last time. No longer will the smoking room table be cluttered with our sociable feet, or the air be made blue with our pipes and wit; no longer will Maple monopolize the Tribune at sunrise, or Wilson wear about a face of gloom. Others will plod up those weary steps to the library, or stand in line to watch the 9:30 procession through the hall. Others will shiver in our seats in the reading room, and dawdle on the front steps in the warm spring sun. For we're off to reform the profession and earn five dollars a week.

Class of 1905

"WELL, we don't know where we're going, but we're on our way," as the songster puts it. 1908, Law School. Rah, rah!! Honk, honk!!! If you don't like the perfume of the gasoline get off and walk.

"History," says Bancroft in his "Fall of the Roman Empire", "is the product of great men." For particulars send a self-addressed envelope to Schenk—pronounced Skink—Law Librarian.

Having thus relieved myself of the duty of writing the history of the class of 1908, Law School—again Rah, rah!!—I will expatiate.

With the assistance of Ames's pony in Trusts, Judge Mack and ourselves got safely through the subject. We took evidence under Whit, so as to get a better understanding of the Thaw trial, but the mean thing only mentioned it once. We settled for Freund's special benefit, some of the doubtful points in wills, and are now able to call our friend's attention to the fact that we are still doing business at the same old stand right in front of the girls' Dorms, and immediately behind "the Old Curiosity Shop," otherwise known as the Divinity School.

History repeats itself. 1908 Law School, rah, rah!!!

Fred Elston don't amount to much, but we are willing to bet any thing from our hat down that he is the best dressed, most Nifty looking individual on the campus, and we aren't excluding Slawson either. Oscar Carlson is our president. He came from Salt Lake City. At date of writing his seat had not been contested. We sent Hugo Friend to Athens to represent us last summer. He got to jumping down there, the natives couldn't stop him, and he jumped all over Europe before he returned. O, we're a hot bunch! Claridge is our star football player. He beat the Medics, and would have made the All American, only he registered late.

Space and faculty supervision prevents any allusion to the deeds of our other great men. Any way the muck rake isn't especially popular, so let peace and harmony prevail, while we all unite in singing that touching tribute to our dear Alma Mater entitled

"We are of Naughty Eight
And if you will kindly wait,
Some day we will donate,
Lawyers to every state.

For Chicago let's give a cheer,
Drink down the good old beer,
We are of Naughty Eight."
Law School, Rah, rah!!

(Faint singing heard in the distance. Curtain.)

History of Law Class of 1909

AND behold it came to pass during the reign of Hall, on the first day of the tenth month in the year of our Lord 1906, that the first year Law class met in the land of the University of Chicago.

Among those congregated were faces, many of whom were strange to each other, for they came from divers states, and some even sojourned from a foreign land. And it was even so.

As time went on it was even thus that these various persons were wont to congregate in the temple for instruction by Dean Hall, or Profs. Bigelow or Whittier, whom each of the class soon learned to admire for their much learning.

And it came to pass that even after these divers ones had become better acquainted that there appeared on the bulletin board one day the notice of an election of Law councilors. The notice caused but little stir, but as the set day for election came night it came to pass that divers heads were seen in groups in the lobbies of the temple. Foremost among the ones congregated were Solomon, Hoover, O'Donnell and Henderson, four learned sages who were taking it in hand to enthuse the remainder of the class.

And it came to pass on the ninth day of the eleventh month that this body of men congregated themselves in the South Lecture room of the temple. Behold the occasion was election day for Law councilors and class officers. And the heart and minds of divers ones did wax warm for the occasion was critical.

Many waxed so warm in this well remembered meeting that it took two hours, save fifteen minutes, to elect four officers and three councilors. The main speakers of the occasion were McDermott, Gallaher, Bair and Faust. The last was seldom heard, but when he spoke behold his enthusiasm waxed so warm it was felt throughout that congregated body. And it was even so.

Thus it was settled as to who should be chief among the tribe of first year Law men.

Since election day class meetings have been so numerous that any particular one is hardly worthy of mention. In fact this body congregates itself daily in the temple. But instead of the elected officers presiding either Dean Hall, or Prof. Bigelow, or Whittier, reigns supreme, save for a daily interruption by Schwartz or Van Schaick, more commonly known as "in toto." The interruptions have been less since Holidays on account of the absence of McDermott, who sojourned in the land of Kansas in the temple of the Senate Chamber, the first term of the Winter Quarter.

And behold it came to pass that it appeared on the bulletin board again an announcement of examinations at the close of the Autumn Quarter, to give the first year men a sample of a real Law examination which is given at the completion of a subject. Many "boned" for the great day. At the opening of the Winter Quarter each returned waxing warm within to learn of the good grades he had made. When, behold the countenance of many fell, for it was soon learned that many were called but few were chosen. Here is where Schwartz redeemed himself from his reputation as a bag of wind, for he even made a grade equal unto the scholarly Morgan, id est '92. Behold there was great consternation among the assembled body for many did flunk. And it was even so. Selah.

Thus the first year men learned the meaning of a preliminary examination and forthwith proceeded to prove themselves worthy of the final task. And it is even so unto this day that fires are being kindled in divers minds of the first year men, to burst forth with a glorious array of wit and knowledge of the law on final examination day and surprise Prof. Bigelow et al.

Many are on to the rumor that is substantiated by higher authority that the professors "soak it" to the first year men all they can and it is a case of the "survival of the fittest" as to who will remain, for the second and third year work is reported not to be nearly so hard. Such rumors are encouraging to many who wish to remain here and be scholars.

SCHOOL OF EDUCATION

The College of Education is one of the professional schools of the University, having for its aim the attainment of the best educational methods, through a study of psychological principles and theories held in ages past, as well as in our present day, and the putting of these methods into practice. The successful application of a theory is the best proof of its efficicacy.

Its aim is to master the principles and the art whereby the boy or girl of to-day may be made the reasonable man or woman of to-morrow, through a judicious development of his instinctive faculties.

A few of the ways and means for bringing about this development may be found in the work of the departments of wood-working, pottery, textiles and domestic science, and in the study of the great book of nature in her many phases and changing aspects.

Realizing that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," the Faculty and students of the College of Education have enjoyed several social occasions during the past year, thus forming a closer acquaintance than the class-room, alone, permits.

WHATEVER happens, remember this, Tim and Tommie and I are good pals. One afternoon three years ago, in the old front room of the fraternity house, we all put on Alpha Psi pledge buttons. Since that day whenever Tim has had money, Tommie and I have always shared it with him. Besides our aim in life is the same. As true Alpha Psi's, as brother comrades, as good scouts in general, we have joined together in a practical endeavor to realize the art of living, in an honest attempt to perfect social intercourse among ourselves. "Those whom Alpha Psi hath joined together, let no woman put asunder." Tommie and I are some gamblers— in a small unpretentious fashion, of course. If there are two Juniors from any other crowd in college who care to pitch nickels or play a quiet game of billiards with us, we will be pleased to take them on. On the other hand, there is something radically wrong with Tim. He always contributes—always. He will give money to a poor wretched street beggar. Why not to us?

It was a beautiful, balmy June day, but Tommie and I were sad. We were busted, absolutely flat—a bit of bad luck as comes to the best of gamblers now and again—so, when Tim blew into the house in a gaudy flannel suit and a tennis racket, our experienced noses scented a chance to recuperate. Nothing big of course,—just supper money. But he waived our offer for a little game and claimed a previous engagement for the afternoon with two of the fairer sex. Naturally it seemed more fitting to Tommie and I that we should play with the beautiful ladies and let Tim stick around the house, but here he again demurred, insisting that while one of them was all right, the other was his own particular girl and wouldn't talk to us at all. Here was our chance. In a wink we drew a bet from him for the suppers that night at Absons' to the effect that, without introductions, we could get both girls to talk to us within two minutes after we first doffed our caps.

"She won't listen to you. She won't even hear what you say—she loves me so," objected Tim, trying to bolster up his courage after the bet was ratified. "You'll just waste your words."

We smiled at him, poor innocent little lamb.

They were waiting there by a lilac bush in the park when we arrived—dandy looking girls. One was a lovely Peach, the other a gorgeous Canada Lily. Tim hid behind a bunch of willows, told us their right names, put us wise that the gorgeous Canada Lily was the one who cared so much for him and pulled out his watch to time us on the two minutes. Tommie and I drilled up to them in brave array and doffed our caps. That was the signal—the game was on.

"Is this Miss So and So?" says Tommie, suavely shooting their right names, which I have forgotten. "Tim told us about you. Tim's grandmother died, so he had to go to a baseball game. We're going to play tennis with you instead. Aren't you glad?"

The lovely Peach made an appropriate reply. Tommie poked me in the ribs. "One down," he says, "Go to it, old head." Then he copped out the lovely Peach for his own and left to me the gorgeous Canada Lily, who was the hard proposition. Still, all I had to do was to get her to talk and I had two minutes to do it in. With an average girl that would be just one minute fifty-nine seconds too much.

"Known Tim long?" I began, dropping down on the greensward beside her. Oddly enough she ignored my question. Perhaps Tim was a tender subject.

Then I picked the handkerchief from under her belt and stooping, pretended to retrieve it with a grand flourish and a pretty speech. The expected "Thank you" came by way of a gracious smile.

"Tell me," this was my next move, "tell me, are you very sorry because I came instead of Tim? Do you want me to go away again?" With this I tossed her one of my most tender, amorous smiles, warm enough to melt a fifty-pound iceberg. But she missed the toss. She was looking out over the horizon with a strange pensive look in her eyes for all the world as if she really hadn't heard what I'd been saying.

I paused to scratch my head. The girl must be pretty batty about Tim to pass completely away as she just had. I must use more strenuous methods. I looked up. Tim had emerged from behind the willows, watch in hand. He held up one finger. One minute had gone. This was getting serious. I cast about in my mind for some inevitable feminine tongue loosener, some universal preoccupation destroyer. Finally it came to me—a brilliant idea. I proceeded to get away with a convulsive shudder and a scream of "A mouse! a mouse! oh, it's here on me! take it away! a mouse!"

The lovely Peach threw a beautiful fit and fainted in Tommie's willing arms. The gorgeous Canada Lily remained unmoved—yes, sir, would you believe it, unmoved.

Tim was holding up three fingers—thirty seconds left. In rapid succession I asked her a few simple questions such as any child might answer on Art, Religion, Philosophy, the Best Way to Make Fudges. They must all have been too hard for her. She shook her head uncomprehendingly. Tim had only one finger up—ten seconds, between me and failure. Again I prayed for an idea, again it came. It was no gentle thing to do but at that moment when I weighed Common Decency against a $10 bill, say, it seemed light and fluffy. Seizing my tennis racket, I soaked the gorgeous Canada Lily a hot one on the soles of her shoes. She opened her mouth to protest and then—didn't. No, damn it, she didn't. A hundred feet away on the greensward Tim—the little fool—was dancing about in a conniption fit for all the world as if some one had just scored a touchdown.

Here the lovely Peach stopped scolding Tommie for being there with the goods when she fainted to propose that we play tennis.

"All right," said Tommie and I, and we looked at the Canada Lily. She — poor misguided little wretch — was still lost in her rapturous trance about Tim. But the lovely Peach approached to within two millimeters of the misguided wretch's right ear and yelled in a voice that could be heard from Cobb all the way to the Alpha Psi House. "Tim—couldn't—come. These—boys—are—going to play—with us—instead. Aren't—you—glad?"

Slowly the strange preoccupied look faded from the Lily's face and it was flooded with an expression of warm intelligence.

"Oh! now I see," she said. "It's all so unusual that, of course, I didn't understand. How very nice of them!"

I looked at Tommie, Tommie looked at me and we both looked at Tim. Then we turned and ran. The green grass grew between us and the fair ladies at the rate of a mile a minute. When you are angry with a chap and that chap is a little fellow, Opportunity knocks at your door. Seize it, young man, seize it and lick that little fellow good. Anyway, Tim's mother was too lenient with him as a child. So when we caught him, say, we beat him to a pulp. We trimmed him to a frazzle. We spanked him till he hollered for mercy, we tore his gaudy flannels, we threw his hat into the lagoon. When we finally collected the remains of our dear beloved brother comrade and sent them home in a cab to his mother, the outfit greatly resembled "hubby" returning from the "club" at three in the morning.

Will some one kindly tell me why all the beautiful ballads are about what you drink and not about what you eat? The poet overflows with effulgencies as to the "foaming Wurtzberger" and "champagne that is fizzy" when, take my word for it, the one is bitter to taste, the other nasty to pay for. But a truly lovable dinner! Oh, the sweet anticipation that precedes it! Oh, the serene contentment that follows it! Has the aforesaid poet a gentle word for it when it first appears, warm, savory, inviting? No—not even a kind prevarication in obsequy when it passes away. If I ever get to be a Senior and lit'ry, I will break the hoodoo and write a lyrical rhapsody to a tenderloin of beef. That night at Abson's Tim was happy because he had stung Tommie and me for the dinner. Tommie and I were happy because we had borrowed Tim's money to pay for the dinner. And the steak was done to a turn. Can you imagine a better combination? "Wine, women and song," says the old boy. Alas! Wine is a mockery, women are a nuisance, and the songs are all coon songs to-day.

Mitchell Tower

Rock upon rock, stone upon stone;
  Builded for ages hence, not years;
Standing, a sentinel, alone;
  Warder of hopes, of plans, of fears.
Chiselled in gray 'gainst a grayer sky,
Soft are the lines that would taper on high,
Soft in the dark, when the daylight has flown;
Rock upon rock, stone upon stone.

Out of the loam of the ages it came,
  Out of the soil of a distant day.
Out of a past that none living may name,
  Out of a fountain of earth and of clay.
Man cut it loose from the quarry so deep;
Man raised its blocks up the unmeasured steep;
Man built the tower standing alone;
Rock upon rock, stone upon stone.

THE JUNIOR COLLEGE COUNCIL had been invited to dine at the Junior Dean's. A rumor of the impending honor hinted at by the chairman in council meeting was followed by personal invitations in purple ink, which drew the most sophisticated of us into an expectant and exalted excitement. For adoration of the Junior Dean springs up in the heart of every Freshman before he has learned to sign a slip in chapel, or has received his first notice in English I. The Junior Dean is adorable—of big frame and broad shoulders, eyes that are keen and humorous, tremendous mouth and aggressive chin, capable of marvels in expression. The dean's voice, instead of being that grating or feeble substitute with which most big men disappoint the world, is of pleasing depth and melody; it lingers humorously over delicious bits of phrasing, or rolls in energetic tones over perpetually fresh titbits of advice. For the adorable dean puts into lively expression, the liveliest, most modern and most fetching of ideas. By the second week Freshmen wonder why he isn't president; the boy with the "dinky" laments his own receding chin, the girl with her high school pin in betraying prominence wonders if the dean's wife is as attractive as she ought to be!

The members of the Council, all but the girl from Science, being at the end of their Sophomore year and grown quite blasé and worldly-wise, had become a little less violent in their adoration of the Junior Dean, half forgetful of his brilliant lectures at Freshman division meetings, the quizzical light in his eyes, the humorous twist of his mouth. But the dinner invitations in purple ink stirred up again old worship and old diffidence in our patronizing souls. We started for the dean's on the evening of the Day, brave in the consciousness of our position in the world as councillors; we neared his house with a hesitancy at marvellous variance with our importance. We were quite Freshmen when, with wraps laid dubiously aside, with proper stiffness we entered the great library.

There were eight members of the council—four men disguised in dress suits and draped about the fireplace, four girls gracing the feathery depths of a Davenport and much improved, as they fondly believed, by early summer finery. The girl from Science, though only a Freshman, was better looking than the rest of us, and could use her brown eyes most skillfully; the other feminine councillors were slightly suspicious of her seriousness of purpose in council meetings and were particularly concerned over her interest in the man from Science. The girl from Philosophy, having more decided views on council measures than the brown-eyed Freshman, was less dangerous, in spite of her unquestionable prettiness. The Literature girl, a stiff, trim little person, was altogether satisfactory because she thought as I did on all council matters, gossiped philosophically with me about the various councillors, and shared with me an unholy, unfeminine delight in the politics of our important body. Our chairman, the Philosophy man, was possessed of very youthful good looks and very mature good sense, and was quite the cleverest man of us all. The Literature man, always well-dressed, and polite when he did not lose his temper, was mysterious with outside political intelligence. The Arts man, a bright, insinuating, kinky-haired little man, we scornfully referred to as "that". But the man from Science had captivated all his segregated colleagues, who thought him quite attractive in spite of his waddle, quite handsome in spite of his big mouth, quite clever in spite of his rather winsome bashfulness. When the girl from Science was discovered next him at dinner we were darkly mistrustful of her, and consoled ourselves with almonds.

THE GIRL FROM PHILOSOPHY

We were introduced to the dean's wife, a fair, placid lady, slightly bored, and a little after the hour were politely marshalled into the dining room. I found myself in embarrassing conspicuousness at the left of the dean, with the dean's wife beyond the centrepiece. It was a very wholesome dinner, cooked, I imagined, on hygienic principles best suited to adolescence. We sipped our soup and nibbled olives with painful grace and cut our roast warily, praying for no catastrophes. We seemed very immature and irresponsible under the eyes of the dean, and felt a childish panic at the thought of forgetting our manners. As the dean and his wife chatted genially, our councillors' pride oozed away. In the stately dining room we felt like children permitted by adult condescension to masquerade in borrowed dignity. At my end of the table the dean conversed adorably as usual, or listened respectfully to our bashful remarks and still more diffident suggestions about the University. And as we discussed council and college affairs we imagined in his quizzical eyes a smiling contempt for our youthful pompousness, and we knew that our half-voiced opinions were breathed into an oblivion shared by the councillors' suggestions of the past.

We talked of railway conductors and Lake Geneva, and telephones, and after dinner, returned to the soft lamplight of the library, we discussed dogs, eagerly, and patted the dean's homely brute that strolled nonchalantly among us. Gathering about the fire we seated ourselves hesitatingly. I sat quite inadvertantly next to the man from Science, who had lapsed into bashful speechlessness. The dean's wife sailed serenely upstairs to a little dean who had been bawling lustily and the dean, between two rosy girls on the big lounge, leaned back impressively and read to us in his rich, humorful voice. He read us fishing stories, cleverly written and related with a lively relish. With real delight we laughed at their delicious humor and relapsed comfortably into the velvet cushions. As I half listened and glanced furtively about me, from the strong face of the man from Science to the lilies-of-the-valley of the Philosophy girl, I meditated on past Junior councils and Junior councils yet to come, which, also recipients of invitations in purple ink, should sink into those self-same cushions in relieved enjoyment of those self-same English fishing tales.

THE GIRL FROM SCIENCE

The third tale and the third gratified murmur ended, we almost saw, in the dean's face, that fatherly look which accompanies the opening of a big gold watch and the warning, "Time to turn in!" The segregated councillors smiled at each other and chatted nervously. Each sweetly polite girl was wondering, wildly, if those men ever would offer to take them home; each one was hoping, just wondering, if it would be the man from Science. After an eternity of conversation, which had returned helplessly to dogs, the Philosophy girl with almost masculine courage declared her intention of leaving, and was gallantly taken possession of by the Philosophy man. The Literature girl, the Science girl, and I, in our different corners, rose undecidedly with rage in our hearts. In my corner I bid goodnight to the dean's wife, who was driving the man from Science to speech, and moved despairingly across the room to the dean. Would none of those despicable men take any of us home! I planned my solitary walk up the black avenue and longed for my father. The Philosophy man, with the Philosophy girl, was shaking hands with the dean. "Miss Arts, may I have the pleasure of taking you home?" "Thank you, Mr. Man from Science, yes," I calmly nodded, as with tumultuous gladness I said "Good-night" to the dean and wondered about the girl from Science.

Outside, in the cool night breeze, four couples sighed in tired relief as they looked back interestedly on the house of the adorable dean. And as we strolled on we breathed happily in the renewed dignity of our councillorships. We had dined with the Junior Dean! It was a long walk home in the moonlight—and there was the man from Science!

A Half Hour at the Information Office

King Solomon may have had the record in Judea for throwing knowledge farther than any of the other wise Peccos, but when it comes to dealing out the real dope, he would be made to look like a prep in knee breeches, as compared with the men behind the desk at the Information Office. The Queen of Sheba would never have thought of consulting old Circus Sol if there had been an Information Office in her neck of the woods; she would have simply stepped forth, put the question, dropped her money in the slot, and received a stream of information that would have made her dizzy. History tells us that no question has ever gone unanswered at this fountain of the Salve of Wisdom. The old motto, "Niemals dicit, je ne sais pas," has become the watchword of the office and has never been defeated. Myriads of students, realizing and appreciating the existence of this wonderful fountain, have consulted the Solons of the Desk on every occasion. And Profs., too, have quietly come around to the private door to have their book learning corroborated.

A half hour's pause within ear-shot of the Shrine of Information would pulverize the highest expectations of the most curious; it would drive the sanest mortal to desperation, cause him to forget that the world is round, and even make him doubt that George Washington never told a lie. Let us record for the benefit of posterity the experiences of a half hour chosen at random.

* * * * *

A prospective Freshman is the first to step up to the desk.

"Is this Mr. Cobb?" he inquires.

"No! Mr. Cobb is standing on the wall at the foot of the stairs immediately to your right."

At this point an elderly lady, with a speaking trumpet, butts in. She thrusts the mouthpiece of the tube into the attendant's hand and in a loud voice inquires:

"What is the address of Professor Flunkum?"

"Hold the wire, madam," is the reply, "until I look it up."

The great surging mass at the desk is, by this time, becoming restless. A stout Ph. D. shoots to the front.

"I'm in a hurry," she says, "and I want to know when I may see Dean Large."

"10:30 to 12 in 14 Haskell," is the immediate reply.

"What time is it now?" she continues.

"2:30."

"Then he isn't here now?"

"No, ma'am."

"Then I can't see him now?"

"No, ma'am."

"Then I'd better come again, hadn't I?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Well, anyway, I'll thank you, sir."

"You're welcome, ma'am."

The next customer is a husky youth 6 ft. 3 by 3 ft. 6, weighing 250 pounds with his hat off. The first indication that he is one of Mr. Stagg's proteges is shown when he grunts out:

"Say there, mister, what can a feller register for in this here school and still play foot-ball?"

Without a pause came the reply, "Household Administration, Cooking and Sewing."

"Say, I've been waiting here ten minutes and I want some stamps," interrupts an A. M. and a S.H.A.R.K. in Latin.

"Sorry,very sorry, Madam,but the Maroon office just bought all the stamps we had."

"Haven't you got any twos?"

"No, madam, we have no stamps at all."

"Well, then give me ten ones."

"Sorry, but we have no stamps at all."

"Well, have you any fives?"

"No stamps at all, madam."

"Well, then, give me a 25-cent book."

"We haven't a stamp in the drawer, madam."

"Well, when will you have some?"

"2:30."

The Seg-ed

"Oh, mercy! I can go to the post-office and back before that time."

Response not printed.

The Pilgrims to the Shrine have thus been disposed of one by one in rapid succession. In a far-off corner, trembling with fear and pale with terror, stands a shy little Freshman maiden. The kind attendant leans over the desk and in as pleasant a tone as he can command, inquires:

"Cannot I be of some assistance to you?"

"Oh, yes, sir," she replies, "you are so kind. You see I registered with Dean Scarem yesterday and have forgotten what my courses are. Could you tell me?"

The attendant's cord of sympathy is punctured. He gazes into her pale green eyes, and with a tone of assurance answers:

"Dean Scarem's favorite dishes are History I, English 0, and Math III."

"Oh, thank you so much," stammers the seg-ed, "I'll try all three of them."

"Oh, dear me," exclaims a careworn lassie, with several volumes of Spencer in her arm. "I've lost my fountain pen."

"Well, where did you lose it?" asks the attendant.

"Oh, I just laid it down on the 'C' bench about two hours ago and now it is not there. It's a wonder people wouldn't leave things alone around here."

"What kind of a pen was it?"

"Why, it was a fountain pen, of course."

"Yes, but what make?" politely insists the attendant.

"It was a Remex, and one Uncle John gave me for my thirty-eighth birthday."

"Was it black or brown?"

"I really never noticed the color," she confides.

"Was the point fine, medium, or stub?"

"Oh, how should I know?"

"Well, did it have a clasp or any mark by which you could identify it?"

"No, it wasn't marked up a bit." she blurts out, all out of patience.

"Well," says the attendant," the only pen we have is a Waterman."

"Oh, that'll be all right," she suggests. "If you don't mind I'll take it home and if it isn't mine I'll return it in a day or two."

Just then the five o'clock bell rings, and the attendant, grabbing both money drawers, makes his escape to the inner office. After a half hour of effort to regain his breath, he drags himself to his lair, to fortify himself against a similar bombardment on the morrow.

"Mr Cobb is standing on the wall at the foot of the stairs"

To Her

'Tis said the roses all depart,
When winds blow cold and sleek;
Yet all the winter I beheld
Red roses on her cheek.
'Tis also said, that cherries pass
Away, when Jack Frost nips;
Yet in the frost I've oft seen grow
Sweet cherries on her lips.

'Tis said, as chilly autumn comes,
The birds no more rejoice;
Yet always, cold though be the blast,
I hear them in her voice.
'Tis said, again, when summer goes,
No rainbows grace the air;
Yet oft I've watched, in winter's light,
Bright rainbows on her hair.

'Tis said, far in the northern sky,
A northern star shines bright,
That guides the trusting sailor safe,
Through calm and stormy night;
But I, upon life's fitful sea,
Of tears and smiles and sighs,
To lead me safely on have found,
My north star in her eyes!

Four Little Dears

(The Editors, with some pride and a great deal of pleasure, present on this page the blue ribbon winners of the great international baby-show held some years ago. The originals, well-known undergraduates of the University, with characteristic modesty, have strictly forbidden the publication of their names. They dread, too, to revive the old scandal occasioned by the awarding of all the prizes to Americans. At the time some English and German competitors were unjust enough to insinuate that undue influence—typical of America—was brought to bear upon the judges. The best refutation of this absurdity is the pictures themselves. Lest the identity of the originals should be too obscure, a few subtle hints are given, in the appended rhymes.)

Here's Harold, our own little pet.
I wonder what honors he'll get.
Senior President, yes,
And I'll venture a guess,
That he never will run into debt.

This "bless-his-sweet-face" is called Johnny.
See the grin on his features so bonny,
As he thinks of the time
(There's too much to rhyme)
When he'll be Head Marshal, Vice-President, run the Information Office, etc., etc.

This fat little rascal's named Edith.
Note the look which towards heaven proceedeth.
As she says, "You just wait,
It is surely my fate,
If they have that big Prom, that I lead it."

This little young darling named Ed
Remarked from his infantile bed,
"Though I never may win,
I hate quitters like sin,
And I'll finish that mile or drop dead."

The Shanty on the Corner

There's a dinky little shanty stuck on Fifty-seventh street,
Where we fellows sometimes gather just to get a bite to eat.
There we meet oft in the morning when alarm clocks fail to call,
When we have a sneaky feeling that we won't reach class at all.
For at times, you know, the very best of men will get up late,
Though the reason for late rising it would scarce be right to state.
Then we rush to Mrs. Ingham's, to the shanty where we dine;
Just to order rolls and coffee when the hour hand creeps to nine.

It's a joke to see men coming all the way from Middle D,
Fellows with their eyes half open, pushing, crowding. You should see
How they gather 'round the counter while they wait to get a seat,
For they're in so big a hurry that they can't stop long to eat;
And then good old Mrs. Ingham, with her ever-present smile,
Hands around the rolls and coffee in a truly fetching style;
Gives an order in the kitchen for "heggs over" and "fried 'am;"
Deals you out a glass of water from her trusted filter can.

Ah! the great men who have gathered in that busy little spot,
And the plans that they unfolded while they drank their coffee hot!
And the gossip that they retailed, and the stories that they told
Would remind you of a tavern in the jolly days of old.
We have heard our Jimmie Twohig tell of athletes on the track,
Heard professors joke with freshies, heard the freshies talking back;
Lots of funny things have happened in the shanty where we dine,
When we've got to make our classes 'ere the hour hand creeps to nine.

Campus Types

No. 1—The Sweet Young Thing

WITHOUT the Sweet Young Thing college life would indeed be a dreary waste. Take your stand outside Cobb at one o'clock and watch the array of charmers which squeezes out the door. When the Sweet Young Thing appears, you will recognize her value because of the contrast. One young man will get on either side of her, while a half-dozen more hang on at the rear of the procession. (This is such a delight to the lady with spectacles who gets A plus in Greek.) It is queer but true that the S. Y. T. always registers in the classes taught by the young, unmarried instructors. We wonder why, don't you? Our artist has selected Gertrude Greenbaum's picture to illustrate this type. Gertrude won't acknowledge it, but she knows as well as the rest of us that the artist was right.

No. 2—The Actor

WHEN you see a person walking across the campus with figure tense, gazing into the middle of next quarter, and muttering, "Ha! Ha! me Lord," then you may know that the Dramatic Club is again preparing to afflict the public, and that the day of the Actor has once more come round. The Actor is a very wise man. He can tell you just where Mansfield fails, and why Shaw is a greater dramatist than Shakespeare. There is another breed of college actor besides this Dramatic Club variety. He is called a Blackfriar. We do not discuss him, for fear that the President's office might not let us publish the book. Some people who ought to know better think that George Law is an Actor, and so we have put his picture by the side of this little essay.

No. 2

No. 3—The College Politician

BLESSED be the college politician. If it were not for him, the Daily Maroon might write editorials about us. When it comes to smiles the Rogers Brothers are left in the far rear by this brand of man just before election time. He is so generous, too. He gives all the girls boxes of Huyler's, and (whisper it) he has even been known on very dark nights to take a few male voters down to Paddy Grimes's. Between elections, however, his memory for faces becomes very poor, and he puts a Yale lock on his pocketbook. The difference between a statesman and a politician is that the one succeeds and the other does not. After a careful survey of the field, we have finally chosen William Buckingham Gray's face to show us what the real politician looks like.

No. 3

No. 4—The Candy Kid

A CANDY KID is a man who will wear lavendar pajamas at night and a green tie over a pink shirt in the daytime. When you meet him he will stick both hands deep into the pockets of his nine-yard trousers, look carelessly to see that his coat is sticking out properly behind and that the bottom button of his vest is open, stick his hat on the back of his head, and grin. He always carries his "cigs" in a case embossed with his fraternity pin. It takes money to be the real thing in the candy line, but just consider how great must be the intellectual satisfaction involved in knowing that you are IT. Burton, that spick and span little Beta, posed for this, in his very latest suit.

No. 5—The Fusser

No. 5

THE FUSSER knows all the girls in college, even if they don't know him. He rushes a new one every week. Perhaps you might suppose that the supply would give out, but you must not forget that each year there come a great many new Freshman maids, who are not wise to his big line of sloppy conversation. Do not envy the popularity of the Fusser, my children. Some fine day he will meet a lady who is dead wise and he will be able to start a flourishing lemonade stand. (Pardon the slang.) The portrait is of dear old Ferguson, that tall Delt with the mushy smile. Fergy is a good chap, and, until this book appears, at least, our very good friend, but we all wish he would go in less for perfumed handkerchiefs and faded roses.

No. 6

No. 6—The Club Girl

OH! OH! What have we here? This, beloved, is Florence Leavitt and Helen Norris. They are Club Girls. This is the first day of the year and they have just returned from their vacations. After they have paid the registrar they will go a-hunting for Freshman girls wherewith to recruit their ranks. How will they know when they have found a good one? That, dear readers, is a question which neither we nor any other mortal man can answer. The girls tell us that a Club Girl is a Club Girl because she is, and we'll have to let it go at that. Who is yon disdainful person passing in the left-hand corner of the picture? That is a Mortar Board, or maybe it is Dean Talbot. At this distance it is hard to tell which.

No. 7—The Hustler

THE HUSTLER is a man who tries to take three majors, play soccer, edit the Daily Maroon and the Monthly Maroon. be a cheer leader, and a student councillor, and a class officer, and officer of the Reynolds Club, all at the same time. He is a selfish individual who refuses to let anyone but himself do any work. Although he is a very useful man, he is not nearly so necessary as he considers himself. Marvellous as it may seem, the University existed many years without his aid. And yet, we would not knock this type. The only trouble with the species is that there are too few examples of it. McDermid, omnipresent old Mac, is the prize hustler. He'll be a great man some day, if he doesn't die first of nervous prostration.

No. 7

No. 8

No. 8—The Athlete

SOME superficial observers say that an athlete never studies. We think that this is a malicious falsehood, because we knew one once who got half-credit in General Literature under Moulton. There has been much discussion as to the meaning of the "C" which athletes wear. Some of the club girls have informed us that it means "cute," and one of the reform and uplift professors assures us that its true significance is "chump." Our own impression, after a careful consultation with Coach Stagg and Hugo Friend, is that it stands for "conned." Hugo also assures us that it is to display this letter that most athletes wear sweaters in the spring when other people are going without their coats. When this book comes out, and we don't have to bother any more getting in Senior pictures, we are going to start a subscription to buy each "C" man a portable electric fan, for use on hot days. Oskaloosa Parry posed for this picture.

No. 9—The Newspaper Man

IF YOU wish to find out all the good points of the Newspaper Man ask Dean MacClintock. He is so fond of the species that whenever he sees one of them coming around the corner of Cobb he runs down into the basement so that the poor fellow won't feel obliged to interview him. The distinctive marks by which you may know a newspaper man are rather uncertain. Leroy Van Patten declares that the real Reporter never shaves more than once a week. George Sass believes that the best newspaper men never smile. But you never can get acquainted with them by looking for these distinctive traits. The real way is to get elected to some class office and have them chase you for your picture. Dan Fernald, for instance, has a collection of twenty-seven pictures of the most beautiful girls in the 'Varsity which he got in this way. He took them home last summer, and all his friends believe to-day that Danny is the biggest ladies' man in Chicago. Cuppy posed for the picture. Unlike his fraternity brother, Van, he cultivates the peaches and cream complexion.

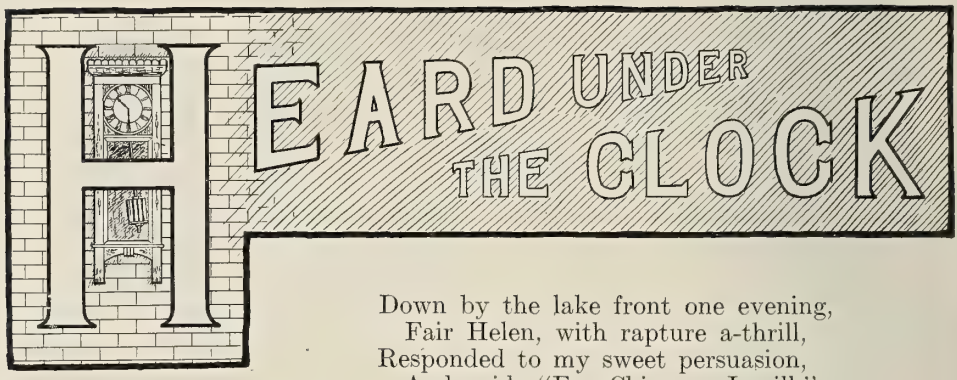
In English Three

Of all the old-time memories that often come to me,
The dearest are the ones that tell of good old English Three;
We had it under Linn and Hill in ancient Ellis hall;
I still can see the fellows lying back against the wall,
I still can see them dozing, in the days that used to be,
When Hill read rotten practice themes, in good old English Three.

We used to make up for lost time when 'leven o'clock came round.
The men were all so tired out they scarce moved o'er the ground.
So we'd drop in at English Three and settle for a snooze.
When Hill began to read we slept as nicely as you'd choose.
And while he read a lot of dope in muffled monotone,
We dreamed of mince and pumpkin pies, we used to get at home.

'Twas many a quiet little sleep we fellows gathered in.
No one had nerve to wake us up, it would have been a sin.
So while Hill read we gave our nerves their greatly needed rest;
If we had heard the woozy tales we'd fainted at the test.
No matter what your faith or creed, to this you will agree,
You'd better sleep than listen to those themes in English Three.



Down by the lake front one evening,
Fair Helen, with rapture a-thrill,
Responded to my sweet persuasion,
And said, "For Chicago—I will."

Man proposes but Dean Talbot disposes.

Helen Hendricks: Oh, I know that. Wellington Jones told me all about it. It's because they have to kick the ball on the side that has the strings on.

A man tried for the Dramatic Club and failed. The next quarter he left college and became a member of E. H. Sothern's company. "That," said President Vail of the Club, "is one more instance to prove the degeneracy of the stage."

Harold Swift is a man that is very polite.
(Never wears any lid, so they say.)
He bows and he scrapes from the dawn till the night.
Harold Swift is a man that is very polite,
And his "shan't we" would fill any grouch with delight
At his beautiful, lady-like way.
Harold Swift is a man that is very polite.

"How slow, O how slow,
My whiskers took to grow."
MR. WILLIAM HILL.

George Fuller says that the business manager of a college paper resembles a man with poor blood. They are both trying to work up a good circulation.

"Meeting at one o'clock to-day. Every man who expects to remain on the paper must be present."
Thus read the Daily Maroon notice.
One o'clock came.
Three stragglers showed up.
The next day came.
The personnel of the staff remained unchanged.

Some men are born fools, some acquire foolishness, while others join the Three-Quarters Club.

Wing, wong, wailer.
Polly's in the trailer.
Who put her in?
Naughty Teddy Linn.
Who pulled her out?
Sisters' themes, no doubt.

Can a man be two things at once? Sure! Look at Willy Hewitt. He's a Junior and a Senior at the same time.

Hostetter sure is a "leader" in student affairs.

A maiden fair once said to Hugo
"Oh, go buy the license. Oh, do go!"
He replied: " 'Twould be nice,
But I ain't got the price.
If you want one so bad, why don't you go?"

Faint heart never got past George Edgar Vincent.

Five eager maidens coming out the door,
Along came a Psi U and then there were four.
Four giggling maidens craning necks to see,
Along came a Delta Tau and then there were three.
Three smiling maidens down the stairway flew,
Along came a Chi Psi and then there were two.
Two hopeful maidens yearning for some fun
Along came a Beta Thet' and then there was one.
One wistful maiden standing all alone
Along came Schuyler and then there was none.

Taking Notes

In a Freshman History Class

"Hello, there, girlie, how did you get up here so soon?—Well, what if I did stop to talk under the clock. I caught a bid to the next Score Club by it, anyway, and that is vastly more important than a mere history class, now, isn't it?—Of course! There, that man's begun to lecture already. I do wish he wasn't so prompt. I've just got loads to tell you.—What was that he said about the Revolution?—Well, read it on that girl's book next to you.—Oh, yes! My dear, did you see the dress on that red-haired girl? Positively the most impossible thing, isn't it? I do wish her mother would dress her better.—Did you get the date of that war?—He said it was important, didn't he? That means we'll get it in our next quiz, I suppose.—Well, never mind, this old girl on my left has got it—There! my fountain pen has gone dry. What shall I do? I wish I dared ask one of those men up in bald head row for a pencil. You do it, dear, you have such a way with the men, you know. Oh, please do. I have such a timid nature.—Do you suppose he heard me?—Oh, thank you, sir!—Oh dear! is my face red?—Who did he say that king was? Louis Something, I guess. I'd hate to be a king and be called by numbers, wouldn't you? Fancy, being named Helen 1th or Gertrude 23rd.—Did he say we would have a map for Monday? How thoughtless of him, with two dances and three receptions coming this week too!—What did you do to your hair, my dear, to make it look so nice to-day? I wish I could do mine up that way.

Do you use those Marcel wavers or the long kind with rubber bands over the end?—Oh! you use an iron! I wouldn't do that for the world. It simply ruins your hair. Mine looks perfectly terrible to-day, doesn't it? I went in swimming yesterday without a cap, and I can't do a thing with it. Now, don't tell me that, because I know it does.—What did he call that? The Treaty of Nimwegen? Whatever that is! Aren't these the most fiendish names?—Did you see the fellow that Ruth went to the Prom with? Wasn't he the pill? He was a good dancer, though, and she certainly caught a goodlooking bunch of flowers. But did you see her dress? Of all the colors! and made exactly like an old gingham I had last summer—Did you get the name of that prime minister?—Well, ask that girl in front of you—and what was his term of office? I'm not at all crazy about remembering all these dates, are you?—What a cute turnover you have on! Did you make it yourself?—Oh, of course, I might have known, everybody gets those for Christmas. They have such splendid sales on them about that time, don't they? You can get them for almost nothing.—Oh, of course, I didn't mean that—How could you?—I think it's perfectly dear—Now, what war is this he's talking about? I declare I never saw a man rush so. He fairly makes me dizzy the way he tears through centuries—I'm getting hungry, aren't you?—Wish I had a cake of chocolate.—Oh, there goes the bell and I've written just five lines of notes this whole hour. Well, ta-ta, honey. See you at lunch."

"BY THE AZURE INLAND SEA"

Astronomy One

Forth they wandered out from Foster
In the merry month of June,
While above them there was shining
In the skies the rounded moon.
(How original the rhyme!)
What a sweet romantic time!

They were not the slushy, mushy
Sort of people, he and she,
Though they took the path that leads you
By the azure inland sea.
Laves taught them of the stars.
They were out to study Mars.

Back they wandered, back to Foster,
In the merry month of June,
While above them still was shining
In the skies the rounded moon.
Midnight struck and then flew past.
Study makes the time fly fast.

Seven-thirty. Mr. Laves
On his class was glaring down.
"What's the color of the planet
Known as Mars, you tell us, Brown."
Brown raised up his sleepy head.
"They are deep, deep blue," he said.

Private Tips to Freshmen

UPON ALIGHTING from the Illinois Central, proceed at once to Kern's, where a green Freshman cap-design specified by Sophomores is to be purchased. The possession of such a cap entitles you to all the humiliations and discomforts of a Freshman. Then proceed with dignity to the Reynolds Club, where, for the small sum of twenty-five cents (provided you have not more) you may purchase an Announcement of Courses from obliging upper classmen. Canadian money received for full value. Here, provided you are not a hopeless mut, you may make dinner dates with fraternity men ad infinitum. By careful management, the cost of two weeks' board may thus be saved.

Board may be secured at the Men's Commons in Hutchinson Hall or at the Women's Commons in Lexington Hall. Extra charge for real food. Quietly let us whisper it—fight shy of anything that looks good on your neighbor's plate. It's sure to be a lemon.

When in search of information, go to the President's office in Haskell, or call personally at the President's house, Fifty-ninth Street and Lexington Avenue, being careful not to wander into Foster Hall while following those directions. President Judson is always pleased to assist Freshmen in arranging their programs, or to outline any course in the curriculum. Above all, be very informal in manner and speech when addressing the President, for he dearly loves a frank, ingenuous person. Always call him Harry or "old pal" in such cases.

If you have been raised a pet and are apt to weep when spoken to suddenly, have your sister come to school with you for a few days until you become city-broken.

Grades of the students may be learned by application at the Recorder's office, Haskell Museum. In case no one is about, the student may find out his record for himself by consulting the files.

Public Telephones are maintained in Cobb Hall, the Reynolds Club and the School of Education. When the operator is at lunch or resting, the student may go to the fifth floor of Cobb and make the connection himself.

Dr. Albion W. Small is the official University physician. Special courses of diet tending to reduce obesity are given in Hutchinson Hall either with or without his prescription. Special exercise for the same purpose may be had at the foot of the stairway in Cobb Hall at ten-thirty every morning. There is no extra charge.

All social events must be approved by the Dean of Women in writing. However, during the spring and summer quarters students are allowed to attend the Friday night band concerts in Jackson Park without special permission.

Entering men should decide before coming to the University what fraternity they wish to join in order that they may have their baggage delivered to the house at once. This will save needless expense for moving.

The information office, located opposite the entrance door of Cobb Hall, is the department of the University which sells postage stamps.

The water in the drinking fountains has been carefully filtered and heated to such temperature as to cause no shock to the system on even the hottest day.

Invitations to the social events of the University will be found on racks provided for the purpose in Ellis, Lexington and Cobb Halls.

Clothing left with Miss Jessie Taylor, Ellis Hall, to the right of the east entrance, will be neatly mended.

The towels in the men's gymnasium have been provided as souvenirs for the students. The faculty thinks that the artistic red lettering of the word "Bartlett" will be an ornament to any den.

Bull dogs should not be taken to class but may be checked on the top floor of the Anatomy Building.

The Daily Maroon, a publication devoted to communications from Dean McClintock and Miss Talbot and the publication of the official athletic calendar, may be had without charge from the office in Ellis.

Proposed Additions to the Curricula

Theory and Practice in Cribbing: A history of Cribbing as a Fine Art: its practical application in the modern class-room, with special study of the double roll, watch case, and duplicate yellow-book system.

Sixth and twelfth weeks of each quarter. Dr. Cawt Attit.

History of Bluffing: The prehistoric bluffers and their methods: modern improvements, with a special study of recent discoveries by noted athletes.

Daily, 8:30–5:00. Asst. Prof. Wood B. Wyse.

Advanced Course in Lassitude and Drowsiness: Spring Quarter. Instruction in avoiding brain-storms: practical study of the value of the campus as a cure for brain-fag. Laboratory periods: during any class hour. Classes meet continuously on the "C" bench or on the grass in front of Cobb.

Dr. R. E. Steasy.

Study of Antique Femininity: Summer Quarter only. Recently discovered specimens from Iowa and Indiana; with special reference to the species "domina scholae." Discussion of the advisability of Oslarization.

I Wonder

I've been around this 'Varsity for full four years or more,
And every day met problems that perplexed me very sore;
I've wondered and I've pondered and I've guessed each day, you see,
And here are some few questions that have daily puzzled me—
I wonder why professors always wear such nobby hats;
I wonder why young married couples never live in flats;
I wonder why green freshies in the green grass seem so green,
Or why the Common's bean-soup always is so full of bean;
I wonder why Professor Starr hates anthropology;
Or why our Dean MacClintock reporters loves to see;
I wonder why Dean Vincent speaks so simply and so slow,
And why he uses language that most any child might know;
I wonder why Professor Moulton has no memory;
Or why Professor Davenport smiles sweetly as can be;
I wonder why Dean Alexander Smith's so fat and short,
And why Alonzo Stagg doesn't care at all for sport;
I wonder, too, why Johnny Moulds great honors never gains;
Why Carleton Burton at his books and studies takes such pains;
I wonder why Paul Harper can scarcely swim a stroke;
Or why poor Harold Swift is almost always broke;
I wonder why Ed Parry never played a single half;
Why solemn Charlie Jordan hardly ever seems to laugh;
I wonder why Gert Greenbaum to a dance is never bid;
Why Dan Fernald's ability in modesty is hid;
I wonder why Fred Noll doesn't care at all for girls,
Why giant Artie Bovee also hates the sight of curls;
I wonder why the Senior council seems so dignified;
Why every course in calculus has been so simplified;
I wonder why our engineering school was built so soon;
And why it seems that students never hear the bell at noon;
I wonder why sweet lovers never gaze up at the moon,
And why the 'Varsity's brass band most always keeps in tune.
I wonder—but then, what's the use of asking any more,
Perhaps these very problems you all have faced before;
And, if I go on a-wondering, though bravest of the brave,
I fear I'd soon be found asleep a–wondering in my grave!

Exams That Might Have Been

(Editor's Note—Just before the winter examinations, the theft of several examination papers was reported by the University Press; consequently new exams had to be constructed at the last minute. With enterprise characteristic of the Junior Class, the Cap and Gown has secured the stolen tests of student knowledge, some of which are reprinted below. The Members of the faculty interested will find the thief's name among the list of contributors.)

Medieval History

(Time—one hour. Answer any eight questions. If you finish before the expiration of the period, further questions may be secured at the desk.)

1. Name, in chronological order, the popes from 590 to 1492, giving dates of accession to and retirement from office. Name three important events which occurred during the tenure of each. Give the theological inclinations of any twenty-five. What was the stand taken by Anastasius III in the matter of marriage and divorce? Where were the following born, and where were they educated: John X, Gregory V, Sergius IV, Benedict IX, Pascal III.

2. Trace the line of descent of Louis XV from Pippin of Heristal. What was his relation to Hermengarde? What characteristics did he inherit from Louis the Debonair? What governor of Illinois does the latter remind you of?

3. State the causes of the one hundred years' war, and name and locate fifty of the important battles fought. Who were in command of the opposing armies in these conflicts, and what was their influence on the final result of the war? What influence did Robert of Artois have? How did the terms of peace affect the expansion of Russia?

4. Locate: Ivrea, Laon, Strathclyde, Fritzlar, Wels, Marcia, Bari, Roosbeck Wanborough, Tannenburg. What was their significance? Name one historical character born at each place. What are their names of these places to-day?

5. Define: bull unigenitus, treaty of Guerande, placetium regio, third statute of provisors, treaty of Tunis, assize of Jerusalem, treaty of Pampluna. What was their significance? What names are connected with them? Give dates.

6. Who were: Liudwolf, Edred, Sihtric, Constantine Porphrogenitus, Nicephorus, Hassan, Berthari, Agilwulf, Albernos, Desiderius, Gian Galezzo. Name two things for which each is known. Where were they born? How old were they when they died? What was their average height?

7. What indications were there of the manifest destiny of Portugal in the year 1107? What effect did the rebellion of Bulgaria have? Did the preaching of a crusade at Mainz have any influence? Who was on the throne of Portugal at the time? Give his genealogy for five generations.

8. If Theodore Roosevelt had been on the throne of France instead of Philip

C. Who would be king of England to-day?

Modern History

(Time—three hours. Answer any five questions.)

1. Name two events for which Napoleon is known.

2. Locate: London, Paris, Berlin, Gibraltar, Rome.

3. Name the principal river of: England, Italy, France, Germany, Russia.

4. Name one of the famous popes of the modern period and state for what he is best known.

5. Did Prussia or France gain by the Franco-Prussian war?

6. Who were: Bismarck, Victoria, Shakespeare, Wilhelm der Grosse, Richelieu, Louis XIV, Gustavus Adolphus, Elizabeth, Marie Antoinette.

Define: coup d'etat, restoration, edict of Nantes, directory, inquisition, reformation, Jacobin, Tuilieries.

College Ideas in Men's Clothes

A LONG FAMILIARITY WITH the particular fancies of college men, has decided this fact for us: that nothing fits in better with a college man's idea of clothes than a Brokaw Brothers' suit or overcoat. For instance, in suits, there's an especially fine college line, ranging from a dignified business suit that will quickly take the conservative dresser's fancy, to the nobby garments that come with full cut peg trousers, designed with the new London bottoms, to roll up or wear straight.

To the Freshman

Pauvre insect! crawling on the campus green,
Thy brightest colors oft in loud display,
Yearning for attention day by day,
Yet scarce at all by any art thou seen!
Or, when alas! thy presence is made known,
How doth the rude and barbarous Soph swoop down,
To make of thee a pitiable clown,
Whose pride, to all the winds, must full be thrown!
Though once, no doubt, a haughty high-school king,
Now is thy greatness gone, poor tiny thing!
Throughout a long-drawn year thou oft must weep,
Ignored, oppressed, confused by problems deep;
And, while these woes thy feeble brain enmesh,
The spurning world laughs out, "Oh! silly Fresh!"

To the Sophomore

All hail! thou, self-styled king of all in sight—
At whose pround feet the varlet "Fresh" must bow,
To plead against thy paddle with rash bow—
Grand Manager of boisterous pranks at night!
The most familiar, thou, with all around,
None on the campus feel so much at home;
And though, perhaps, thou seemest away to roam,
Art always there when rough-house can be found.
None e'er would dare such slouchy hats to wear,
Or in such sweaters, shirts, or boots appear;
Thine is delight to make professors frown,
And long to turn the buildings up-side down;
Once thought most wise, that wisdom's in a trunk.
Thy name's, alas, the synonym for "flunk"!

To the Junior

Thou social favorite of the seg-ed hall—
  Most eager suitor for her charming smile—
  The speeding year how soon wilt thou beguile,
Attending every prom, hop, dance and ball!
A hero, now, upon the football field,
  Or footlight star in some bright college play—
  Loud leader in all functions of the day—
The palm of popularity you wield.
The seg-eds fluttering hearts you best invade,
In evening shadows, with sweet serenade.
In class none near so well, as wise, can pose,
Who yet so little of the lesson knows.
Half-way you stand, betwixt a man and boy,
But dedicate yourself to constant joy!

To the Senior

Most envied, yet most pitied, of mankind;
  What dignity and wisdom grave is thine,
  Yet, as exams pass by, you sadder pine,—
To think these days must soon be left behind!
To thy high state the lowly Fresh aspires;
  The Soph, of thee alone, in reverence stands;
  The Junior, too, some good advice demands;
The seg-ed thy proud bearing oft admires.
  No more thy books, for pleasures, wilt thou shirk—
  You've learned, at last, to settle down to work.
  Dear college life, in reverie, now unfurled—
  What contrast to the coming battling world!
  A tear from off the last theme then you wipe,
  And seek for consolation in your pipe.

A Hot Time at Foster

IN FOSTER, be it known, there is no privacy. One's friendships, one's history, one's clothes, and one's food are alike public property—particularly one's food. Inmates of Foster are a strange and degenerate race; all of them bear the stamp. An outsider is always impressed by their barbaric ways and their extraordinary dialect.

Once upon a time an outsider was staying over night with a Fosterite. The gentle Fosterite tried hard to entertain her. After marking all the Fraternity men they knew in the address book, and discussing the relative merits of the various male organizations, they longed for some excitement. Pink, the Fosterite, brought forth cocoa and the other requisites for the staff of life, but could find no alcohol. Therefore the outsider went below to another friend and explained and procured what was lacking.

When the fudge was cooling on the window-sill a knock was heard on the door. "We've come to your party," announced three voices, whose owners promptly entered. "How dear of you to think of us," said the twins from downstairs, coming in after them. "You're a true sport, all right," piped in others from the hall, and the party from the corner suite entered. "Pink, you blessed angel-lamb, how grand of you to entertain in such style," announced a stout young woman from 32, making for the window sill.

In less than five minutes there were sixteen occupants of the room. In seven, there was no fudge, and in eight the guests, had left; and Pink found on her door this heinous notice;

Big Eats!
Pink Entertains!
Whole Floor invited!
Come at once!

with similar handwriting on the wall.

After this occurrence, and after a brief enjoyment of indoor-roller-skating, the Fosterite and her guest found it necessary to dash to the air-shaft, in order to hear the conversation of the lady at the 'phone. Then they dressed for dinner—and the party.

In Foster the parties are carefully graded down to the intellect of the inmates. At six everybody assembled in the dining-room. Most of them were in sun-bonnets and short dresses. One sweet child wore a blue Buster Brown suit, and clasped a Teddy-bear to her heart. Another wore a child's (?) football suit and carried a paper football. Some were Japs and some were Little Lord Fauntleroys. One tried to look like a papoose, and succeeded in resembling an Egyptian mummy.

After they had eaten animal crackers and milk they played "drop the handkerchief" and other games they could easily understand and appreciate. Then they danced, and after other serious and intellectual amusements they were sent to bed.

"Well," said the outsider, yawning sleepily, "Fosterites are queer, but doubtless they mean well."

A Trick of the Muse

I wish that I could warble like the other poets sing,
About the campus goddesses, and all that sort of thing,
But whenever I attempt it there is something in the air
Makes me write about the lady who will never comb her hair.

Oh, the grind,
Yes, the grind;
Everybody knows the kind,
With her pencil in her tresses,
Which are floppin' down behind.
You will hear the boys all say,
As they pass her, day by day,
"What an antiquated, enervated grind."

The Muse brings up the picture of a skirt which doesn't fit
And which aims to meet a shirtwaist, which it doesn't always hit,—
And of shoes which lack a polish,—and a dinky little cap
Which is stuck upon the cranium, like an island on a map.

Oh, the grind,
Yes, the grind,
She's a fright, but never mind,
She is on the road to wisdom
Of an imitative kind.
She is after Ph.D.
Maybe she will get a key,
Will the much-berated, educated grind.

I wish that I could write about the girl that's "comme il faut".
I wish the Muse would let me sing of charming girls I know.
But when I take my pen in hand, I always see, instead,
The sallow-looking lady who will never comb her head.
